PREFATORY NOTE.

After a residence of nearly four years in the West Swami Vivekananda returned to his own country, and landing at Colombo, delivered the lectures published in this volume, the last but one of them being the famous oration delivered in Calcutta, his native city. His progress through Ceylon to Southern India, through Southern India to Madras and thence to Calcutta and Almora was marked by all those signs of veneration, reverence and devoted love which Indian people are wont to show to those whom they look upon as Divine Messengers. In the brief account of journeys given below, no complete description of this characteristic feature has been attempted, nor of the picturesque oriental displays which everywhere greeted the Teacher. In fact the descriptive portion has been made to serve the purpose alone of presenting each lecture in the circumstances in which it was delivered, and not in any sense of describing a journey which was of unusual interest. All Eastern students, and still more perhaps those of England and America will welcome this book, containing as it does the latest utterances of their much loved Teacher, for the lectures exhibit to the Hindu the fervid patriotism of the "Calcutta boy" and to the American and the English that larger patriotism which counts the world as its home, and all the people in it, as fellow-countrymen.

CEYLON.

THE Swami Vivekananda travelled from England by the steamer Prince Regent Leopold, of the North German Lloyd Line, and was accompanied by three of his English friends. The voyage was of a pleasant character, and gave the Swami a very much needed rest after his incessant labour in the West for three and a half years. Indeed the rest was required more than the Swami anticipated, for from Colombo began a series of receptions and demonstrations which continued, without intermission, until Calcutta was reached. When the steamer reached Colombo harbour, on the afternoon of January 15th 1897, the Swami was met on board by Swami Niranjanananda, one of his Guru-Bhais, Mr. T. G. Harrison a Buddhist gentleman resident in Colombo, Mr. Kanaga Sabha and Mr. Sockanathan, two members of a reception committee which had been formed among the Hindu community of Colombo to give him a fitting reception on his return to the East. A steam launch had been secured for the purpose of taking him ashore, and when this reached the dock it was seen that a crowd numbering many thousands of Hindus was thronging the wharf and the roadway outside. Enthusiastic cheering greeted the Swami's arrival, and this was continued as he walked through the crowd to a carriage in which he was driven with the Hon. P. Coomara Swamy, M. L. C., to a new and handsome bangalow in Barnes Street, which had been prepared for his reception. Barnes Street is on the outskirts of Colombo, and leads directly out of the cinnamon gardens, the road between the gardens and the bangalow being about a quarter of a mile in extent. At the entrance to this road an exceedingly handsome triumphal arch formed of branches, leaves, and flowers of the cocoanut tree, bore a welcome motto to the Swami, and the intervening quarter of a mile between this and the bangalow was flanked on either side with split palmyra leaves, bent over in such a manner as to form a continuous festoon. Another and similar triumphal arch marked the entrance to the bangalow compound. In these grounds preparations had been made for the official reception, and in the presence of a very large number of Hindus the Hon. P. Coomara Sawmy read the following address of welcome :—

SRIMAT VIVEKANANDA SWAMI.

REVERED SIR,

In pursuance of a resolution passed at a public meeting, of the Hindus of the city of Colombo, we beg to offer you a hearty welcome to this Island. We deem it a privilege to be the first to welcome you on your return home from your great mission in the West.

We have watched with joy and thankfulness the success with which the mission has, under God's blessing, been crowned. You have proclaimed to the nations of Europe and America the Hindu ideal of a universal religion, harmonizing all creeds, providing spiritual food for each soul according to its needs, and lovingly drawing it unto God. You have preached the Truth and the Way taught from remote ages by a succession of Masters whose blessed feet have walked and sanctified the soil of India, and whose gracious presence and inspiration have made her through all her vicissitudes the Light of the World.

To the inspiration of such a Master, Sri Rama-Krishna Paramahansa Deva, and to your self-sacrificing zeal, western nations owe the priceless boon of being placed in living contact with the spiritual genius of India, while to many of our own countrymen, delivered from the glamour of western civilization, the value of our glorious heritage has been brought home.

By your noble work and example you have laid Humanity under an obligation difficult to repay, and you have shed fresh lustre upon our Mother-land. We pray that the grace of God may continue to prosper you and your work, and

We remain, Revered Sir,

Yours faithfully,

for and on behalf of the Hindus of Colombo,

P. COOMARA SAWMY,

Member of the Legislative Council of Ceylon,

Chairman of the Meeting.

A. KULAVEERASINGHAM,

COLOMBO, January 1896.

Secretary,

It was now late in the evening, and, as the day had been fatiguing, the Sawmi gave but a brief reply, expressive of his appreciation of the kind welcome he had received. But he took advantage of the opportunity to point out that the demonstration had not been in honor of a great politician, or a great soldier, or a millionaire, but of a begging Sanyasi, showing the tendency of the Hindu mind towards religion. He urged the necessity of keeping religion as the backbone of the national life, if the nation were to live, and disclaimed any personal character for the welcome he had received, but insisted upon its being the recognition of a principle.

During the succeeding day, Saturday, the Banglow, (which, by the bye, is to be named Vivekananda Lodge in honor of the Swami's visit) was thronged incessantly by visitors. It became, indeed, a place of pilgrimage, the honor and respect shown to the Swami beings something of which no conception can be formed by those who are accustomed to the religious demonstration of the West. It was giving practical effect to the theory which alone obtains in India, that of Guru-Bhakti (devotion to the teacher). Among the many visitors were men from all stations in life, from the first officials in Ceylon to the very poor. An interesting example, as illustrative of much the Swami has said of the religious character of the people of India, may be mentioned. A poor woman, who was evidently in distress, came to see the Swami bearing in her hands the customary offering of fruit, and it appeared that her husband had left her in order that he might be undisturbed in his search for God. The woman wanted to know more about God, she said, so that she could follow in his footsteps. The Swami advised her to read the Bhagavad Gita, and pointed out to her that the best way to make religion practical to one in her station was the proper fulfilment of household duties. Her reply was most significant. "I can read it, but what good will that do me if I cannot understand it and feel it?" A striking example, first of the truth of the saying that religion does not rest in books, and secondly of the amount of deep religious thought to be found among the poor, and apparently uneducated, of the East. To those who were new to Eastern religious customs there were many incidents of great interest. One of these to which allusion may be made is the practice of a religious teacher giving a fruit to his pupils, a present of any kind from a man of God being greatly treasured by those who receive it. Another interesting circumstance was the presentation of a dinner by a Hindu from the North Western Provinces, a poor man, who nevertheless, had been unsparing in the preparation of the meal, but neither the Swami nor any one with him could induce him to be seated in the presence of the Swami, this being, in his eyes, a mark of great disrespect to one in his position. It will interest Western readers of this book, too, to know that the greeting from a Hindu to a sanyasi is an obeisance and the words "Namo Narayanaya," (salutation to God) to which the Sanyasi replies "Narayana."

On the Saturday evening the Swami gave a public lecture in the Floral Hall to an audience which thronged the building from corner to corner. Peculiar interest attaches to this lecture as it was the first which he had given in the East, for most of our readers will be aware that until he spoke at the Chicago Parliament of Religions he had never lectured in his life, religious teaching in India being given in the form of question and answer between the guru and disciple.

The Swami spoke in the following terms :—

What little work has been done by me has not been from any inherent power that resides in me, but from the cheers, the good will the blessings, that have followed my path in the West from this our very beloved, most sacred, dear mother-land. Some good has been done, no doubt, but especially unto myself, for what before was the result, perhaps, of an emotional nature, gained the conviction of certainty, attained the power and strength of demonstration. Before then, as every Hindu thinks, I thought—as the Hon. President has just pointed out to you—that this is the Punya Bhumi the land of Karma. To-day I stand here to say, with the conviction of truth, that it is so, that if there is any land on this earth that can lay claim to be the blessed Punya Bhumi, to be the land to which all souls on this earth must come to account for Karma, the land where every soul which is wending its way Godward must come to attain its last home, the land where humanity has attained its highest towards gentleness, towards generosity, towards purity, towards calmness, the land above all all of introspection and of spirituality, it is India. Hence have started the founders of religions from the most ancient times, deluging the earth again and again with the pure and perennial waters of spiritual truth. Hence have proceeded the tidal waves of philosophy that have covered the earth, East or West, North or South, and hence again must start the wave which is going to spiri-tualise the material civilization of the world. Here is the life-giving water with which must be quenched the burning fire of materialism, burning the core of the hearts of millions in other lands. Believe me, my friends, this is going to be.

So far I think I have seen ; so for those of you who are students of the history of races already are aware also. The debt which the world owes to this our motherland is immense. Taking country with country there is not one race on this earth to which the world owes so much as to the patient Hindu, the mild Hindu. "The mild Hindu" sometimes is used as an expression of reproach, but if ever a reproach concealed a wonderful truth it is the "mild Hindu," who has been the blessed child of God always. Civilizations have arisen in other parts of the world. In ancient times and in modern times great ideas have emanated from strong and great races. In ancient or in modern times wonderful ideas have been carried forward from one race to another. In ancient or in modern times seeds of great truth and power have been cast abroad by advancing tides of national life, but mark, my friends, it has been always with the blast of war trumpets, and with the march of embattled cohorts. Each idea had to be soaked in deluges of blood; each idea had to advance on the blood of millions of our fellow beings, each word of power had to be followed by the groans of millions, by the wails of orphans, by the tears of widows. Thus, in the main, other nations, have taught, and India for thousands of years has existed. Here activity existed when even Greece did not exist, when Rome was not thought of, when the very fathers of the modern Europeans lived in the German Forests painting themselves blue. Even earlier, when history has no record, and tradition dares not peer into the gloom of that intense past, from then until now ideas after ideas have marched out from her, but every word has been spoken with blessing behind it, and peace before it; we of all nations of the world have never been a conquering race, and that blessing is on our head; therefore we live. There was a time when at the march of big Greek battalions the earth trembled. Vanished off the face of the earth, not even a tale left to tell, gone land of the Greeks. There was a time when the Roman Eagle floated over everything worth having in this world; everywhere Rome went, pressing it on the head of humanity; the earth trembled at the name of Rome. But the Capitoline Hill is a mass of ruins, the spider weaves its web where Cæsars ruled. There have been other nations equally glorious that come and go, living a few hours of exultant and of exuberant dominance, and of wicked national life, and vanishing like ripples on the face of the waters.

So have these nations made their mark on the face of humanity. But you live, and if Manu came back to-day he would not be astonished, and would not find himself in a foreign land, The same laws are here, laws adjusted, thought out through thousands and thousands of years, customs the outcome of the acumen of ages and the experience of centuries, that seem to be eternal; and as the days go by, as blow upon blow of misfortune has been delivered upon them, they seem to have served one purpose making them stronger and more constant. And to find the centre of all that, the heart from which the blood flows, the main spring of the national life, believe me after my little experience of the world, it is here. To the other nations of the world religion is one among the many occupations of life. There is politics, there are the enjoyments of social life, there is all that wealth can buy, or power can bring, there is all that the senses can enjoy, and among all these various occupations of life, and all this searching after something more, something which can give a little more whetting to the cloyed senses—among all these there is a little bit of religion. But here, in India, religion is the one and the only occupation of life. That there has been a Chino-Japanese war, how many of you know? Very few, if any. That there are tremendous political movements and socialistic movements trying to transform Western society, how many of you know? Very few, if any. But that there was a parliament of religions in America, that there was a Hindu Sanyasin sent over there, I am astonished to find even the coolie knows. That shows the way the wind blows, where the national life is. I used to hear, especially from foreigners—I used to read books written by globe trotting travellers who wailed at the ignorance of the Eastern masses, but I found out it was true and at the same time untrue. I see a Western ploughman in England, or America, or France, or Germany, or anywhere. Ask him what party he belongs to, and he can tell you whether he belongs to the Radicals or the Conservatives, and for whom he is going to vote. In America he knows whether he is Republican or Democrat, and even knows something about the silver question. But ask him about his religion. He goes to church, that is all he knows. He goes to church, and perhaps his father belonged to a certain denomination. That done all right.

Come to India, take one of our ploughmen. "Do you know anything about politics?" "What is that?" he says; he does not understand about the socialistic movements, the relation between capital and labour, and all that—never heard of such things in his life; he works hard, gets his bread; all right. "What is your religion?" "Look here, my friend, I have marked it on my forehead." He can give me a good hint or two on questions of religion. That has been my experience. That is our nation's life. As individuals have each their own peculiarities, each man has his own method of growth, his own life marked out for him, as we Hindus would say, by the infinite past life, by all his past Karma; because into this world, with all the past on him, the infinite past ushers the present, and the way in which we use the present is going to make the future. Thus everyone born into this world has a bent, a direction, towards which he must go, through which he must live, and what is true of the individual is equally true of the race. Each race, similarly, has a peculiar bent, each race has a peculiar raison d'être, each race has a peculiar mission to fulfil in the life of the world. Each race has to make its own result, to fulfil its own mission. Political greatness or military power, is never the mission of our race; it never was, and, mark my words, never will be. But there has been the other mission given to us, to conserve, to preserve, to accumulate, as it were, into a dynamo, all the spiritual energy of the race, and that concentrated energy is to pour forth in a deluge on the world whenever circumstances are propitious. Let the Persian or the Greek, or the Roman, or the Arab, or the Englishman march his battalions, conquer the world, and link the different nations together, and the philosophy and spirituality of India is ready to flow along the new-made channels into the veins of the nations of the world. The calm Hindu's brain must pour out its own quota to give to the sum total of human progress. India's gift to the world is the light spiritual.

Thus, in the past we read in history whenever there arose a great conquering nation uniting the different races of the world, binding India with the other races, taking her out, as it were, from her loneliness, from her aloofness from the rest of the world into which she again and again cast herself, wherever such function has been brought about, the result has been the flooding of the world with Indian spiritual ideas. At the beginning of this century Schopenhauer, the great German philosopher, studying from a not very clear translation of the Vedas made from an old translation into Persian, and thence by a young Frenchman into Latin, says "There has been no study in the world, excepting in the original, so ennobling as that of Upanishads. These have been the solace of my life; they will be the solace of my death," and then this great German sage foretold that "The world is about to see a revolution in thought more extensive and more powerful than that which was witnessed by the Renaissance of Greek Literature," and to-day his predictions are coming to pass. Those who keep their eyes open, those who understand the workings in the minds of the different nations of the West, those who are thinkers and study the different nations, will find the immense change that has been produced in the tone, the procedure, in the methods, and in the literature of the world by this slow, never-ceasing permeation of Indian thought.

But there is another peculiarity as I have already hinted to you. We never preached our thoughts with fire and sword. If there is one word in the English language to represent the gift of India unto the world, if there is one word in the English language to style the effect which the literature of India produces upon mankind, it is this one word "fascination." It is the opposite of anything that takes you suddenly, throws on you, as it were, a charm all of a sudden. To many, Indian thought, Indian manners, Indian customs, Indian philosophy, Indian literature, are repulsive at the first sight, but let them persevere, let them read, let them become familiar with the great principles underlying these ideas, and it is ninety-nine to one that the charm will be upon them, fascination will be the result. Slowly and silently, as the gentle dew that falls in the morning, unseen, unheard, yet producing a most tremendous result, has been the work of this calm, patient, all-suffering, spiritual race upon the world of thought.

Once more history is going to repeat itself, for to-day, under the blasting light of modern science, when old, apparently strong, and invulnerable beliefs have been shattered to their very foundations, when special claims laid upon the allegiance of mankind by different sects have been all blown into atoms and have vanished into air—when the sledge hammer blows of modern antiquarian researches are pulverising like masses of porcelain all sorts of antiquated orthodoxies—when religion in the West is only in the hands of the ignorant, and the knowing ones look down with scorn upon anything belonging to religion, here comes the philosophy of India, the highest religious aspirations of the Indian mind where the grandest philosophical facts have been the practical spirituality of the people. This naturally is coming to the rescue, the oneness of all the immense Infinite, the idea of the Impersonal, the wonderful idea of the eternal soul of man, of the unbroken continuity in the march of beings, the infinity of the universe. For the old sects looked upon the world as a little mud puddle, and thought that time began but the other day. It was there and only there, in our old books, and through all ages, the grand idea governing all the search for religion, the infinite range of time, space and causation, and above all the infinite glory of the spirit of man. When the modern tremendous theories of evolution and conservation of energy and so forth are dealing death blows to all sorts of crude theologies, what can hold any more the allegiance of cultured humanity but the most wonderful of convincing, broadening, and ennobling ideas, that can only be found in that most marvellous product of the soul of man, the wonderful voice of God, the Vedanta.

At the same time I must remark that what I mean by our religion working upon the nations outside of India is only the principles, the back-ground, the foundation upon which that religion is built. The detail workings, the minute points which have been worked out through centuries of social necessity, little ratiocinations about manners and customs and social well-being, do not rightly find a place in the category of religion. We know, at the same time, that what our books lay down is only for the time, for we find there a clear distinction made between the two sets of truths, the one which abides for ever, built upon the nature of man, the nature of the soul, the soul's relation to God, the nature of God, perfection and so on, the principles of cosmology, of the infinitude of creation, how that it is no creation, but it is only projection, the wonderful law of the cyclical procession, and so on—these are the eternal principles founded upon facts which are universal in nature. Then there are the minor laws, more properly belonging to the Puranas, to the Smritis, and not to the Srutis, about guiding, the workings of our everyday life. These have nothing to do with the other things. Even in our own nation these have been changing all the time. Customs of one age, of one yuga, have not been the customs of another, and as yuga comes after yuga, they will still have to change, Great Rishis will appear and lead us into manners and customs that are suited to new environments.

The great principles underlying all this wonderful, infinite, ennobling, expansive view of man, and God, and the world, have been produced in India, and in India alone man did not stand up and fight for a little tribe God. "My God is true and yours is not true; let us have a good fight over it." It was only here that such ideas did not occur as fighting for little gods. These great underlying principles being based upon the eternal nature of man are as potent to-day for working for the good of the human race as they were thousands of years ago, and they will remain so so long as this earth remains, so long as the law of Karma remains, so long as we are born as individuals and have to work out our own destiny by our individual power.

And above all, what India has to give to the world is this. If we watch the growth and development of religions in different races, we shall always find this, that each tribe at the beginning has a god of its own. If the tribes are allied to each other these gods will have a generic name, as all the Babylonian gods for example ; when the Babylonians were divided into so many races they had the generic name of Baal, just as the Jewish races had different gods with the common name of Moloch ; and at the same time you will find that one of these tribes becomes superior to the rest, and it lays a claim to its own king being the king over all. Therefrom it naturally follows that it also wants to preserve its own god as the god of all the races. Baal-Merodach, said the Babylonians, was the greatest god ; all the others were inferior. Moloch-Yavah was the superior over all other Molochs ; and these questions had to be decided by the fortunes of battle. The same struggle was here, in India also the same competing gods have been struggling with each other for supremacy, but the great good fortune of this country and of the world was that there came out in the midst of the din and confusion a voice which declare Ekam sat vipra bahudha vadanti (" He is one, whom the sages declared by various names"). It is not that Siva is superior to Vishnu, not that Vishnu is everything and Siva is nothing, but it is the same one whom you call either Siva or Vishnu, or by a hundred other names. The names are different, but it is the same. The whole history of India you may read in these few words. The whole history has been a repetition in massive language, with tremendous power, of that one central doctrine. It was repeated in the land till it had entered into the blood of the nation, till it began to tingle with every drop of blood that flowed in their veins. till it became one with the life, part and parcel of the material of which they were composed, and thus the land was transmuted into the most wonderful land of toleration, giving the right to welcome the various religions as well as all sects into the old mother country.

And herein is the explanation of the most remarkable phenomenon that is only witnessed here, of all the various sects, apparently hopelessly contradictory, yet living in such harmony. You may be a dualist, and I may be a monist. You may believe that you are the eternal servant of God, and another may declare that he is one with God himself, yet both of them are good Hindus. How is that possible? Read then—Ekam sat Vipra Bahudha Vadanti (That which exists is one; the sages call it by various names). Above all others, my countrymen, this is the one grand truth that we have to teach to the world. Even the most educated of the other countries tuck up their noses at an angle of 45 degrees and call our religion idolatry. I have seen that, and they never stopped to think what a mass of superstition there was in their own heads. It is still so everywhere, this tremendous sectarianism, low narrowness of the mind. The thing which a man has is the only thing worth having; the only life worth living is his own little life of dollar-worship and mammon-worship; the only little possession worth having is his own, and nothing else. If he can manufacture a little clay nonsense or invent a machine, that is to be admired beyond the greatest possessions. That is the case over the whole world, in spite of education and learning. But education has yet to be in the world, and civilisation—civilisation has begun nowhere yet, ninety-nine decimal nine per cent. of the human race are more or less savages now. We may read of these things in different books, we hear of toleration in religion and all that, but very little is there yet in the world, take my experience for that ; ninety-nine per cent do not even think of it. There is tremendous religious persecution yet, in every country in which I have been, and the same old objections are raised against learning anything new. All the little toleration that is in the world, practically, all the little sympathy that is in the world yet for religious thought, is here, in the land of the Aryas, and nowhere else. It is here that Indians come and build temples for Mohammedans and Christians ; nowhere else. If you go to other countries and ask Mohammedans, or people of other religions to build a temple for you, see how they will help. They will instead try to break down your temple and you too, if they can. This is one great lesson therefore that the world wants most, that the world has yet to learn from India, the idea, not only of toleration, but of sympathy. As has been said see Siva Mahimna Stotra—"different rivers, taking their start from different mountains, running straight or crooked, and at last coming unto the ocean, so, Siva, all are coming unto thee." Though they may take various roads all are on the way. Some may run a little crooked, others may run straight, but at last, Oh Lord, they will all come unto Thee. Then and then alone is your Bhakti and Siva complete, when you not only see Him in the Lingum, but you see Him everywhere. This is the sage, this is the lover of Hari, who sees Hari in everything and in everyone. If you are a real lover of Siva you must see Him in everything, and in everyone. You must see that every worship is given unto Him whatever may be the name or the form, that all knees bending towards the Kaballah, or kneeling in a Christian Church, or a Buddhist Temple, are kneeling unto Thee, whether they know it or not, whether they are conscious of it or not; in whatever name or form they are offered, all these flowers are laid at Thy feet, for Thou art the one Lord of all, the one Soul of all souls. He knows infinitely better what this world wants than you or I. It is impossible that all difference can cease; it must exist; without variation life must cease. It is this clash, the differentiation of thought, that makes for light, for motion, for everything. Differentiation infinitely contradictory must remain, but it is not necessary that we should hate each other therefore. It is not necessary therefore that we should fight each other. Therefore we have to learn the one central truth again, that was only preached here, from our motherland, and once more has to be preached from India. Why? Because not only was it in our books, but it runs through every phase of our national literature, and it is in the national life. Here and here alone is it practised every day, and any man whose eyes are open can see that it is practised here and here alone. Thus we have to teach religion. There are other and higher lessons that India can teach, but they are only for the learned. The one lesson of mildness, gentleness, forbearance, toleration, sympathy, and brotherhood everyone—man, woman and child, learned or unlearned, without respect of race, or creed, or caste, may learn. “They call Thee by various names; Thou art One.”

The following day (Sunday) was again spent in receiving visitors, until the evening, when the Swami paid a visit to the temple. The crowd which accompanied him was immense, and a most interesting characteristic of the evening was the repeated stopping of the carriage in order that the Swami might receive gifts of fruit, that garlands of flowers might be placed round his neck and rose water sprinkled over him. It is a custom also, when an especially honoured guest is paying a visit to a house, to burn lights and display fruit on the threshold, and this was done at almost every Hindu dwelling which the procession passed, particularly in Checku St, the heart of the Tamil quarter of Colombo. At the temple the Swami was received with shouts of "Jai, Maha Dev" (Hail, great soul) and after a short converse with the priests and others who were assembled returned to his bungalow when he found a number of Brahmins with whom he conversed until half past two the following morning. On Monday the Swami gave a second lecture, to another large attendance, but as the main points of the discourse were included in subsequent lectures a report is not given.

On Tuesday Morning, the 19th, the Swami left for Kandy by rail. It should be explained that his original intention had been to take another steamer direct from Colombo to Madras, but on his arrival in Ceylon so many telegrams poured in beseeching a visit to Southern Indian towns, if only in passing, that he was induced to alter his plans, and to make the journey overland. At the Railway Station at Kandy, the celebrated hill resort of Ceylon, a large crowd again awaited him with a native band and the temple insignia, to convey him in procession to a bungalow in which he was to take rest. When the cheering which greeted his arrival had subsided an address of welcome was read, of which the text follows :—

SRIMAT VEVEKANANDA SWAMI.

REVERED SIR,

On behalf of the Hindu Community we beg to offer you a very hearty welcome to Kandy and to express our sincere hope that your visit to our mountain capital will be as pleasant to you as it is bound to be profitable to us.

We cannot allow this occasion to pass without giving expression to the sentiments of esteem and admiration, which your single-hearted devotion to the cause of truth and the brilliant ability with which you have expounded its principles in lands other than India, have made us entertain towards you.

Since your first visit to America as the Representative of our Faith at the Parliament of Religions, we have watched your missionary career with the keenest interest, and it is with feelings of deep thankfulness that we hear of the unexpectedly large measure of success that has attended it in the Western World. The seeds of Eternal Truth which you and your fellow-workers are sowing with such self-denying perseverance are destined to yield a rich harvest of Spiritual progress in the near future. That you may be long spared in health and strength to continue and consummate the labour of love you have undertaken is the fervent prayer of your humble co-religionists.

(Signed).

The reply was again brief, and after a few hours' rest, during which the interesting points of the beautiful town were visited, the journey was resumed, and Matale reached the same evening. On the Wednesday morning the Swami began a coach-ride of 200 miles, through a country the beauty of whose vegetation has placed it among the brightest spots in the world, to Jaffna. Unfortunately, when some few miles beyond Dambool, a mishap occurred, one of the four wheels of the coach giving way, and necessitating a stoppage of three hours on the roadside. Then, however, progress was made, but this time slowly, by bullock cart, through Kanahari and Tinpani to Anuradhapura. Anuradhapura is one of the oldest remaining towns in the world, and contains ruins which point to the fact that in its day, 2000 years ago, it was one of the largest cities the world has seen. There are many deeply interesting Buddhist relics, including a sacred Bo-tree, (a shoot of the Maha Bodi Tree at Buddha Gaya), an ancient tank speaking eloquently of the engineering genius of that age and monuments known as Dagobas in which it is believed from discoveries which have been made, that huge quantities of jewelry and valuable property formerly belonging to Buddhist temples lie concealed from the time of the Tamil invasion of Ceylon. Under the shade of the tree we have mentioned, the Swami gave a short address to a crowd of two or three thousand people, interpreters translating as he proceeded into Tamil and Cingalese. Its subject was "worship", and he exhorted his hearers to give practical effect to the teachings of the Vedas, rather than to pay all attention to mere empty worship. He also spoke of the universality of religion, and, in this stronghold of Buddhism, urged that the God worshipped either as Siva, as Vishnu, as Buddha, or under any other name was one and the same, thus showing the necessity for not only tolerance but sympathy between followers of different creeds.

From Anuradhapura to Jaffna is a distance of 120 miles, and as the roads and the horses were equally defective the journey was troublesome, saved only from tediousness by the exceeding beauty of the surroundings. Indeed two successive nights sleep were lost. On the way, however, a welcome interposition was caused by the reception of the Swami with all honour at Vavoniya, and the presentation of the following address:—

*To His Reverence SWAMI VIVEKANANDA, Apostle Representative of Hinduism
in the Parliament of Religions:—*

Worshipful Swami:—We the inhabitants of Vavoniya, a district in the Northern Province of the Island of Ceylon, beg to avail of this opportunity to approach you with a welcome in our midst. We never expected, although we knew of your return from Europe, that you would favour us (ignorant souls) with a visit in this distant part of the island, but by the consideration you have shown us you have greatly elevated us, and it is not flattery to say that you have laid us under an eternal debt of gratitude.

About the services that have been rendered by you in the cause of our religion it were prudent to hold a discreet silence, but we cannot help mentioning that we have observed with pride and admiration your unswerving devotion in furthering a cause so noble. What endeared you to us most and won our hearts for you was that kindness of desposition, liberality of sentiments, and disinterested self-sacrifice which you have taught us both by precept and example.

Do accept for all that you have done on our behalf our thanks as a poor token of the regard and esteem we all entertain for you. That you may long be spared in health and that your efforts may prosper more and more is the fervent prayer of our humble selves.

We beg to remain, most Reverend Swami,
Your obedient pupils.

When the Swami had briefly replied the journey was resumed through the beautiful Ceylon jungles to Jaffna. There was a reception of an informal character early the following morning at Elephant Pass, where a bridge connects Ceylon with the Island of Jaffna, and twelve miles from the town of the latter name the Swami was met by many of the leading Hindu citizens, and a procession of carriages accompanied him for the remainder of the distance. It seemed as if every street in the town were decorated, nay, every house, and the scene when, in the evening, the Swami was driven in torch light procession to a large pandal erected at the Hindu College was most impressive. All along the route there was great enthusiasm, and there must have been from ten to fifteen thousand people accompanying him. At the Pandal the following address was read :—

REVERED SIR,

WE, the inhabitants of Jaffna professing the Hindu religion, desire to offer you a most hearty welcome to our land, the chief centre of Hinduism in Ceylon, and to express our thankfulness for your kind acceptance of our invitation to visit this part of Lanka.

OUR ancestors settled here from Southern India, more than two thousand years ago, and brought with them their religion, which was patronized by the Tamil kings of Jaffna ; but when their government was displaced by that of the Portuguese and the Dutch, the observance of religious rites was interfered with, public religious worship was prohibited, and the Sacred Temples including two of the most far-famed Shrines, were razed to the ground by the cruel hand of persecution. In spite of the persistent attempts of these nations to force upon our forefathers the Christian religion, they clung to their old faith firmly, and have transmitted it to us as the noblest of our heritages. Now, under the rule of Great Britain, not only has there been a great and intelligent revival, but the sacred edifices have been, and are being, restored.

WE take this opportunity to express our deep-felt gratitude for your noble and disinterested labours in the cause of our religion in carrying the light of truth, as revealed in the Vedas, to the Parliament of Religions, in disseminating the truths of the Divine Philosophy of India in America and England, and in making the Western world acquainted with the truths of Hinduism, and thereby bringing the West in closer touch with the East. We also express our thankfulness to you for initiating a movement for the revival of our ancient religion in this marterialistic age, when there is a decadence of faith and a disregard for search after spiritual truth.

We cannot adequately express our indebtedness to you for making the people of the West know the catholicity of our religion, and for impressing upon the minds of the Savants of the West the truth that there are more things in the Philosophy of the Hindus than are dreamt of in the Philosophy of the West.

We need hardly assure you that we have been carefully watching the progress of your Mission in the West, and always heartily rejoicing at your devotedness and successful labours in the field of religion. The appreciative references made by the press, in the great centres of intellectual activity, moral growth, and religious inquiry in the West, to you and to your valuable contributions to our religious literature, bear eloquent testimony to your noble and magnificent efforts.

We beg to express our heart-felt gratification at your visit to our land and to hope that we, who, in common with you, look to the Vedas as the fountain of all true spiritual knowledge may have many more occasions of seeing you in our midst.

May God, who has hitherto crowned your noble work with conspicuous success spare you long, giving you vigour and strength to continue your noble Mission.

We remain, Revered Sir,

Yours faithfully

for and on behalf of the Hindus of Jaffna.

An eloquent reply was given, and on the following evening (Sunday) the Swami lectured in the same Pandal on Vedantism, a report is appended :—

The subject is very large and the time is short ; a full analysis of the religion of the Hindus is impossible in one lecture. I will, therefore, present before you the salient points of our religion in as simple language as I can. The word Hindu, by which it is the fashion now-a-days to style ourselves, has lost all its meaning, for this word merely means those who lived on the other side of the river Indus. This name, Sanscrit Sindhu, was murdered into Hindu by the ancient Persians, and all people living on the other side of the river Sindhu were called by them Hindus. Thus this word has come down to us; during the Mohammedan rule we took up the word ourselves. There may not be any harm in using the word, of course, but, as I have said, it has lost its significance, for all the people who live on this side of the Indus, you may mark in modern times, do not follow the same religion as they did in ancient times. The word, therefore, covers not only Hindus proper, but Mohammedans, Christians, Jains, and all the others who live in India. I, therefore, would not use the word Hindu. What word should we use then? The other words which alone we can use are either the Veidiks, followers of the Vedas, or better still the Vedantists, followers of the Vedanta. Most of the great religions of the world owe allegiance to certain books, which they believe are the words of God, or some other supernatural beings, and which are the basis of their religion. Now of all these books, according to the modern Savants of the West, the oldest are the Vedas of the Hindus. A little idea, therefore, is necessary about the Vedas.

This mass of writing called the Vedas is not the delivery of persons. Its date has never been fixed, can never be fixed, and, according to us, the Vedas are eternal. There is one salient point which I want you to remember, that all the other religions of the world claim their authority as being delivered by a personal God or a number of personal beings, angels, or special messengers of God, unto certain persons, while the claim of the Hindus is that the Vedas do not owe their authority to anybody, they are themselves the authority, being eternal—the knowledge of God. They were never written, never created, they have been throughout time; just as creation is infinite and eternal, without beginning and without end, so is the knowledge of God without beginning and without end. And this knowledge is what is meant by the Vedas (Vid to know). The mass of knowledge called the Vedanta was discovered by personages called Rishis, and the Rishi is defined as a Mantra Drashta, a seer of thought; not that the thought was his own. Whenever you hear that a certain passage of the Vedas came from a certain Rishi, never think that he wrote it, or created it out of his mind; he was the seer of the thought which already existed; it existed in the universe eternally. This sage was the discoverer; the Rishis were spiritual discoverers.

This mass of writing, the Vedas, is divided principally into two parts, the Karma Kanda and the Gnana-Kanda—the work portion and the knowledge portion, the ceremonial and the spiritual. The work portion consists of various sacrifices; most of them of late have been given up as not practicable under present circumstances; some remain to the present day in some shape or other. The main ideas of the Karma Kanda, the duties of man, the duties of the student, of the householder, of the recluse, and so forth, the duties of various stations, are followed, more or less, down to the present day. But the spiritual portion of our religion is in the second part, the Gnana Kanda, the Vedanta, the end of the Vedas, the gist, the goal of the Vedas. The essence of the knowledge of the Vedas was called by the name of Vedanta, the Upanishads, and all the sects of India, either Dualists, qualified Dualists, Monists, or the Sivites, Vaisnavites, Saktas, Souras, Ganapatis—if there is any sect in India which dares to come within the fold of Hinduism it must acknowledge the Upanishads of the Vedas. They can have their own interpretations, can interpret them in their own way, but they must obey the authority. That is why we want to use the word Vedantist instead of Hindu. All the philosophers of India who are orthodox have to acknowledge the authority of the Vedanta, and all our present day religions, however crude some of them may appear, however inexplicable some of their purposes may appear to be, one who understands them, studies them, can trace back to the ideas of the Upanishads. So much these Upanishads have gone into our race that those of you who study the symbology of the crudest religion of the Hindus will be astonished to find sometimes figurative expressions of the Upanishads—the Upanishads become symbolized after a time into figures and so forth. Great spiritual and philosophical ideas in the Upanishads are to-day with us household worship in the form of symbols. Thus the various symbols used all come from the Vedanta, because in the Vedanta they are used as figures, and these ideas went among the nation and percolated it throughout until they became part of their everyday life as symbols.

Next to the Vedanta come the Smritis. These also are books written by sages, but the authority of the Smritis is subordinate to that of the Vedanta, because the Smritis stand in the same relation with us as the Scriptures of the other religions stand with regard to them. We admit that the Smritis have been written by particular sages ; in that sense they are the same as the Scriptures of other religions, but these Smritis are not a final authority. If there is anything in a Smriti which contradicts the Vedanta the Smriti is to be rejected ; its authority is gone. These Smritis, we see again, have varied from time to time. We read that such and such Smriti should have authority in the Satya Yuga, such and such in the Treta Yuga, some in the Dwapara Yuga, and some in the Kali Yuga, and so on, so that as essential conditions changed as various circumstances came to have their influence on the race, manners and customs had to be changed, and these Smritis, as mainly regulating the manners and customs of the nation had also to be changed from time to time. This is a point I specially ask you to remember. The principles of religion that are in the Vedanta are unchangeable. Why? Because they are all built upon the eternal principles that are in man and nature ; they can never change. Ideas about the soul, going to heaven, and so on, can never change ; they were the same thousands of years ago, they are the same today, they will be the same millions of years to come. But those religious practices which are based entirely upon our social position and co-relation must change with the changes in society. Such an order, therefore, would be good and true at a certain period and not at another period. We find accordingly that certain food should be allowed at one time and stopped at another, because the food was for that time, but climatic and other things change, various other circumstances require to be met, so the Smriti stopped the food and so on. Thus it naturally follows that if in modern times our society requires some changes they must be met, and sages will come and show the way how to meet them ; not one jot of the principles of our religion will be changed ; they will remain intact.

There are then the Puranas (Puranam Panchalakshanam) about history, about cosmology, about eschatology, with various symbolical illustrations of philosophical principles and so forth. These were written to popularize the religion of the Vedas. The language in which the Vedas are written is very ancient ; even among scholars very few can trace the date of these books. The Puranas were written in the language of the people of that time, what we call modern Sanscrit. Then they were meant, not for scholars, but for the ordinary people ; and ordinary people cannot understand philosophy. Such things were given unto them in concrete form by means of the lives of saints and kings and great men, historical events that happened to the race, and so on. Everything that the sages could get hold of was taken up, but every one of them only to illustrate the eternal principles of religion.

There are still other books, the Tantras. These are very much like the Puranas in some respects, and in some of them there is an attempt to revive the old sacrificial ideas of the Karma Kanda. All these constitute the Scriptures of the Hindus, and if there is such a mass of sacred books in a nation and in a race, which, (nobody knows for how many thousands of years) have devoted the greatest part of its energies to the thought of philosophy and spirituality, it is quite natural there should be so many sects ; it is a wonder there are not thousands more. And these sects very much differ from each other in certain points. We should not have time to understand the differences between these sects, and all the spiritual details about them ; therefore I take up the common ground, the principles of all these sects, which every Hindu must believe.

The first is the question of the creation, that this Nature, Prakriti, Maya, is infinite, without beginning. It is not that this world was created the other day, not that a God came and created the world, and since that time has been sleeping ; that cannot be. The creative energy is still going on. God is eternally creating—never at rest. Remember the passage in the Gita where Vishnu says : “ If I remain at rest for one moment this universe will be destroyed.” If that creative energy which is working all around us, day and night, stops a second the whole thing falls to the ground. There never was a time when that energy did not work throughout the universe, but there is the law of cycles, Pralaya. Our Sanskrit word for creation, properly translated, should be projection and not creation. For the word creation in the English language has unhappily got that fearful, that most crude idea of something coming out of nothing, creation out of non-entity, non-existence becoming existence, which, of course, I would not insult you by asking you to believe. Our word, therefore, is projection. The whole of this Nature existed, it becomes finer, sub-sides, then after a period of rest, as it were, the whole thing is projected forward, and the same combination, the same evolution, the same manifestations appear, and remain playing, as it were, for a certain time, again to break into pieces, to become finer and finer, till the whole thing subsides and again comes out. Thus it is going on backward and forward, with a wave-like motion through eternity. Time and space and all are within this nature. To say, therefore, it had a beginning is utter nonsense. No such question can occur as of its beginning, and of its end. Therefore, wherever in our Scriptures the words beginning and end are used, you must remember that it means the beginning and the end of one particular cycle; no more than that.

What makes this creation : God. What do I mean by the use of the English word God ? Certainly not the ordinary use of the word in English ; a good deal of difference. There is no other word in English. I would rather confine myself to the Sanscrit word Brahman. He is the general cause of all these manifestations. What is this Brahman ? He is eternal, eternally pure, eternally awake, the almighty, the all knowing, the all merciful, the omnipresent, the formless, the partless. He creates this universe. If he is always creating and holding up this universe two difficulties arise. There is partiality in the universe. One is born happy, and another unhappy ; one is rich and another is poor ; this is partiality. Then there is cruelty also, for here the very condition of life is death. One animal tears the other to pieces, each man tries to trample on the body of his own brother. This competition, cruelty, horror, sighs rending the skies day and night, is the state of things in this world of ours. If this be the creation of a God that God is worse than cruel, worse than any devil that man ever imagined. Ay says the Vedanta, it is not the fault of God that this partiality exists, that this competition exists. Who makes it? We ourselves. There is a cloud throwing its rains on all fields alike. Only that field which is well cultivated gets the advantage of the shower, another, which has not been tilled or taken care of, cannot get that advantage. It is not the fault of the cloud. His mercy is eternal and unchangeable; it is we that make the differentiation. But how can this difference be explained? Some are born here happy, some are born unhappy. They do nothing to make that difference! They do—in their last birth, the birth before this.

We therefore come to the second principle on which we all agree, not only all Hindus, but all Buddhists, and all Jains. We all agree here that life is also eternal. It is not that it has sprung out of nothing; that cannot be. Such a life would not be worth having. Everything that has beginning in time must end in time. If life began but yesterday it must end to-morrow, and annihilation is the result. Life must have been existing. It does not require much in modern times to see that, for all the sciences of modern times have been coming round to our help, illustrating from the material world the principles embodied in our Scriptures. You know it already, that each one of us is the effect of the infinite past, the child is ushered into the world, not as something flashing from the hands of nature, as poets delight so much to depict, but that the child has the burden of an infinite past, for good or evil he comes to work out his own past deeds, and we know that he does so. That makes the differentiation. This is the law of Karma. Each one of us is the maker of his own fate. It knocks on the head at once all doctrines of predestination and fate, and it gives us the only reconciliation between God and man. We, we, and none else, are responsible for what we suffer. We are the effects, and we are the causes. We are free therefore. If I am unhappy, it has been my own making and that very thing shows that I can be happy if I will. If I am impure, that is also my making, and that very thing shows that I can be pure if I will. So on. The human will stands beyond all circumstances. Before it all the powers, even of nature, must bow down, succumb, and become its servants, the strong gigantic, infinite will and freedom in man. This is the result.

The next question, of course, naturally would be what is the soul? We cannot understand God in our Scriptures without knowing the soul. There have been attempts in India, and outside of India, to catch a glimpse of the beyond by studying the external nature, and we all know what an awful failure has been the result. Instead of giving us a glimpse of the beyond, the more we study the material world the more we tend to become materialized. Even that little spirituality which we possessed before vanishes the more we handle the material world. So that, therefore, is not the way to spirituality, to knowledge of the highest, but through the heart, the human soul. The external workings do not teach us anything about the beyond, about the infinite, it is only the internal. Through soul, therefore, the analysis of the human soul alone, we can understand God. We have difference of opinion as to the nature of the human soul among the various sects in India, but there are certain points where we all agree, that these souls are without beginning and without end, immortal by their very nature ; secondly that all the powers, blessing, purity, omnipresence, omniscience are buried in each soul. That is a grand idea we ought to remember. However weak or wicked, great or small, in men and in animal, resides the same omnipresent, omniscient soul. The difference is not in the soul, but in the manifestation. Between me and the smallest animal the difference is only of manifestation, but as a principle he is the same as I am, he is my brother, he has the same soul as I have. This is the greatest principle that India has preached. The talk of brotherhood of man becomes in India brotherhood of universal life, of animals, of all life down to the little ants, all are our bodies. Evam tu panditao jnatva sarvabhuta-mayam Harim &c. " Thus the sage, knowing that the same Lord inhabits all bodies, will worship every body as such." That is why in India there have been such merciful ideas about animals, about the poor, and about everybody and everything else. This is one of the common grounds about our ideas of the soul.

Naturally we come to the idea of God. One thing more about the soul. Those who study the English language are often deluded by the words soul and mind. Our Atman and soul are entirely different things. What we call Manas, the mind, they call soul. The West never had the idea of soul until the last twenty years, through Sanscrit Philosophy. That is to say, the body is here, beyond that the mind, yet the mind is not the Atman ; it is the Sukshma Sarira, the fine body, made of fine particles, which goes from birth to death, and so on, but behind the mind is the Atman, the Soul, the Self of man. It cannot be translated by the word Soul or Mind, so we have to use the word Atman, or, as Western philosophers have attempted of late, the word Self. Whatever the word you use, you must keep clear in your mind, that the Atman is separate from the mind, as well as from the body, and that this Atman is going from birth to death, accompanied by the mind—the Sukshma Sarira. And when the time comes that it has attained to all knowledge, and manifested itself in perfection, then this going from birth to death ceases for it. Then it is at liberty either to keep that mind, or the Sukshma, or to let it go for ever, and remain independent and free through all eternity. The goal of the soul is freedom. That is no peculiarity of our religion. We also have heavens, and some hells too, but these are not infinite, for in the very nature of things they cannot be. If there were any heavens, they would be only repetitions of this world of ours on a bigger scale, a little more happiness, a little more enjoyment, and all the worse for it. There are many of these heavens. Persons who do good works here with the thought of reward, when they die are born again as gods in one of these heavens, as Indras, and so on. These gods are the names of certain states. They also have been men, and by good work they have become gods, and those different names that you read, as Indra, and so on, are not the names of the same person. There will be thousands of Indras. Nahusha was a great king, and when he died he became Indra. It is a position; one soul becomes high and takes the Indra position, and remains only a certain time, then dies there, and is born again as man. But the human body is the highest of all. Some of the gods may try to go higher and give up all ideas of enjoyments in heavens, but, as in this world, wealth, and positions, and enjoyments, delude the vast majority, so most of the gods become deluded also, and after working out their good Karma they fall back and become human beings again. This earth, therefore, is the Karma Bhumi; it is this earth from which we attain to liberation. So even these heavens are not worth having. What is then worth having? Mukti, freedom. Even in the highest of heavens, says our Scripture, you are a slave; what matters if you are a king for twenty thousand years? So long as you have a body, so long as you are a slave to happiness, so long as time works on you, space works on you, you are a slave. The idea, therefore, is to be free of external and internal nature. Nature must stand at your feet, and you must trample on it, free, glorious, going beyond. No more there is life; therefore, no more death; no more enjoyment, therefore, no more misery. It is bliss beyond everything, unspeakable, indestructible. What we call happiness and good here, are but particles of that eternal Bliss. This is the goal.

The soul is also sexless; we cannot say of the Atman that it is a man or a woman. That belongs to the body alone. All such ideas, therefore, as man or woman, are a delusion when spoken with regard to the Self, and are only proper when spoken of the body. So are the ideas of age, it never ages; the ancient one is always the same.

How did it come down? There is but one answer in our Scriptures. Ignorance is the cause of all this bondage. It is through ignorance that we have become bound; knowledge will cure it, take us to the other side. How will that knowledge come? Through love, Bhakti. By the worship of God, by loving all beings as the temples of God; He resides there. Thus with that intense love will come knowledge, and ignorance will disappear, the bonds will break, and the soul will be free. There are two ideas of God in our Scriptures, the one the personal, the other the impersonal. The idea of the Personal God is that He is the omnipresent creator, preserver, and destroyer of everything, the eternal father and mother of the universe, but one who is eternally separate from us and from all souls ; and liberation consists in coming near unto Him and living in Him. There is the other idea of the Impersonal, where all these adjectives are taken off as superfluous, as illogical, and the idea is preached of an impersonal, omnipresent being, who cannot be called a knowing being, because knowledge only belongs to the human mind. He cannot be called a thinking being, because that is a process of the weak. He cannot be called a reasoning being, because reasoning is a sign of weakness. He cannot be called a creating being, because none creates except in bondage. What bondage has he? None works except for the fulfilment of desires ; what desires has He? None works except it is to supply some wants ; what wants has He? In the Vedas it is not the word "He" that is used ; but "It," for "He" would make an invidious distinction, as if He were a man. "It" the impersonal, is used, and this Impersonal "It" is preached. It is called the Advaita system.

And what are our relations with this Impersonal being? That we are He. We and He are one. Every one is but a manifestation of that Impersonal, the basis of all being, and misery consists in thinking of ourselves as different from this Infinite, Impersonal being ; and liberation consists in knowing our unity with this wonderful Impersonality. These, in short, are the two ideas of God that we find in our Scriptures. Some remarks ought to be made here, that it is only through the idea of the Impersonal God that you can have any system of ethics. In every nation the truth has been preached from the most ancient times—love your fellow beings as yourselves—I mean love human beings as yourselves. In India it has been preached, ‘love all beings as yourselves’; we make no distinction between men and animals. But no reason was forthcoming, no one knew why it would be good to love other beings as ourselves. And the why is there; it is there, in the idea of the Impersonal God, that you understand it—when you learn that the whole world is one—the oneness of the universe—the solidarity of all life,—that in hurting any one I am hurting myself, in loving any one I am loving myself. Hence we understand why it is that we ought not to hurt others. The reason for ethics, therefore, can only be had from this ideal of the Impersonal God. There are some other great questions in it. I understand the wonderful flow of love that comes from the idea of a Personal God, I thoroughly appreciate the power of Bhakti on men in different times requiring different sorts of power. What we want now in our country, however, is not so much of weeping, but a little strength. What a mine of strength is in this Impersonal God, when all superstitions have been thrown overboard, and man stands on his feet with the knowledge that I am the Impersonal Being of the world. What can make me afraid? I care not for even nature’s laws. Death is a joke unto me. Man stands on the glory of his own Soul, the infinite, the eternal, the deathless—that Soul which no instruments can pierce, which no heat can dry, or fire burn, no water melt, the infinite, the birthless, the deathless, without beginning and without end, before whose magnitude the suns and moons and all their systems appear like drops in the ocean, before whose glory space crumples up into nothingness, and time vanishes into non-existence. This glorious Soul we must believe in. Out of that will come power. Whatever you think, that you will be. If you think yourselves weak, weak you will be, if you think yourselves strong, strong you will be, if you think yourselves impure, impure you will be, if you think yourselves pure, pure you will be. This teaches us not to think of ourselves as weak, but as strong, omnipotent, omniscient. No matter that I have not expressed it yet ; it is in me. All knowledge is in me, and all power, and all purity, and all freedom. Why cannot I express it? Because I do not believe in it. Let me believe in it and it will come out, must. This is what the idea of the Impersonal teaches. Make your children strong from their very childhood, teach them not weakness, nor forms, but make them strong, let them stand on their feet, bold, all conquering, all suffering, and first let them learn of the glory of the soul. That you get alone in the Vedanta ; there alone. It has ideas of love and worship and other things which we have in other religions, and plenty of them too ; but this is the life giving thought, the most wonderful. There, there alone, is the great thought that is going to revolutionize the world and reconcile the knowledge of the material world with religion.

Thus I have tried to bring before you the salient points of our religion—the principles. I have only to say a few words about the practice and the application. As we have seen, under the circumstances existing in India, so many sects naturally must appear. As a fact we find that there are so many sects, and at the same time we find there is this mysterious fact in India, that these sects do not quarrel with each other. The Sivite does not say that every Vaisnavite is going to be damned or the Vaisnavite that every Sivite will be damned. The Sivite says, this is my path, and you have yours ; at the end we must come together. They all know that in India. This is the theory of Ishtam. It has been recognised in the most ancient times that there may be various forms of worshipping God. It is also recognized that different constitutions require different methods. What is your method of coming to God may not be my method, possibly may hurt me altogether. Such an idea as that there is one way for everybody is injurious, meaningless, and utterly to be avoided. Woe unto the world when everyone is of the same religious opinion and takes to the same path. Then all religion and all thought will be destroyed. This variety is the very soul of life. When it dies out entirely creation will die. When this variation in thought is kept up we must exist ; and we need not quarrel because of that variety. Your way is very good for you, but not for me. My way is good for me but not for you. My way is called in Sanscrit my Ishtam. Mind you, we have no quarrel with any religion in the world. We have each our Ishtam. But when we see men coming and saying "this is the only way," and trying in India to force it on us we have a word to say ; we laugh at them. For such to talk of love is absurd—those that want to destroy their brothers because they seem to follow a different path towards God. Their love does not count for much. What preach they of love who cannot bear another man following a different path from their own? If that is love, what is hatred? We have no quarrel with any religion in the world, whether they worship Christ, or Buddha or Mahomet, or any prophet in the world. "Welcome, my brother," the Hindu says, "I am going to help you; but you allow me to follow my way too. That is my Ishtam. Your way is very good, no doubt, but it may be dangerous for me. My own experience tells me what food is good for me, and no army of doctors can tell me that. So I know from my own experience what path is the best for me." That is the goal, the Ishtam, and therefore we say that if a temple, or a symbol, or an image, helps you to realise the Divinity within, you are welcome. Have two hundred images. If certain forms and formularies help you to realise the divine, God speed you; have, by all means, whatever forms, and whatever temples, and whatever ceremonies, bring you nearer to God. But do not quarrel about them; the moment you quarrel, you are not going Godward, you are going backward, towards the brutes.

These are a few ideas in our religion. It is one of inclusion of every one, exclusion of none. Our castes and our institutions, though apparently linked with our religion, are not so. These institutions have been necessary to protect us as a nation, and, when this necessity for self-preservation will be no more they will die their natural death. But, for the time being, the older I grow the better I seem to think of these time-honoured institutions of India. There was a time when I used to think that many of them were useless and worthless, but the older I grow the more I seem to feel a diffidence in cursing any one of them, for each one of them is the embodiment of the experience of centuries. A child of yesterday destined to die the day-after to-morrow, comes to me, and asks me to change all my plans, and if I hear the advice of that baby and change all my surroundings according to his ideas, I myself would be the fool, and no one else. Such is much of the advice that is coming to us from different countries. Tell them, I will hear you when you have made a stable society yourselves. You cannot hold on to one idea for two days, you quarrel and fail, you are born like moths in the spring and die like them in five minutes. You come up like bubbles and burst like bubbles too. First form a stable society like ours. First make laws and institutions that remain undiminished in their power through scores of centuries. There will be time then to talk on the subject with you, but, till then, my friend, you are only a giddy child.

I have finished what I had to say about our religion. I will end by reminding you of the one pressing necessity of the day. Praise Vyasa, the great author of the Mahabharata, that in this Kali Yuga there is one great work. The Tapas and other hard yogas that were practised in other Yugas do not work now. What is needed in this Yuga is giving, helping others. What is meant by Danam? The highest of gifts is the giving of spiritual knowledge, the next is the giving of secular knowledge, and the next is the saving of life. The last is giving food and drink. He who gives spiritual knowledge, saves the soul from many and many a birth. He who gives secular knowledge opens the eyes of human beings towards that spiritual knowledge, and below these come all other gifts, even the saving of life here. Therefore it is necessary that you must learn this, and note that all the other works are of much less value than this work. The highest and greatest help is that given in the dissemination of spiritual knowledge. There is an eternal fountain of spirituality in our Scriptures, and where on earth except in this land of renunciation do we find such noble examples of that practical spirituality. I have had a little experience of the world. Believe me, there are great talks in other lands, but the practical man of religion, who has carried it into his life, is here and here alone. Talking is not religion, parrots may talk, machines many talk now-a-days. But show me the life of renunciation, of spirituality, of all suffering, of love infinite. Then you are a spiritual man. Well then with such ideas and such noble practical examples in our country it would be a great pity if all the treasures in our brains, and in the hearts of all these great Yogins did not come out and become the property of every one, rich and poor, high and low; not only here, but it must be thrown broadcast all over the world. This is one of the greatest duties, and you will find that the more you work to help others the more you help yourselves. This is the one great duty on you if you really love your religion. If you really love your country—that you must struggle hard to be up and doing, with this one great idea of bringing out the treasures from their closed books, and delivering them over to their rightful heirs. And above all, one thing is necessary. Aye, for ages we have been saturated with awful jealousy; we are always getting jealous of each other. Why has this man a little precedence, and not I; even in the worship of God we want precedence, to such a state of slavery have we come. This is to be avoided. If any sin is crying at this time in India it is this slavery. Every one wants to command and no one to obey. First learn to obey. The command will come by itself. Always learn to be a servant, and you will be a master. And it is owing to the absence of that wonderful Brahmachari system of yore. Avoid this jealousy, and you will do the great works that have yet to be done. Our ancestors did most wonderful works—we look back upon their work with veneration and with pride, but we also are going to work, and let others look back with blessings and with pride upon us as their ancestors. With the blessing of the Lord every one here will do such deeds that will eclipse those of our ancestors yet, great and glorious as they may have been.

With his address at the Hindu College, at Jaffna, the journey across Ceylon came to a close, but it would be showing a lack of appreciation did this narrative fail to place on record the warmth and unanimity with which the Swami was received, from Colombo to Jaffna. This is the more remarkable not only on account of the inaccessibility of much of the country, on account of lack of railway facilities to the centres from which information of what is going on in the world can be obtained, but because the Swami was hitherto quite unknown in Ceylon, and had not the advantage of being a native. But so great has been the impression made by his work in America and England, and by his brief visit, that urgent requests have been made to him to send teachers, and we may with confidence look forward to a great future for the liberal teachings of Sri Ramakrishna Paramahansa in the Island. May the blessing of God rest on all who have so shown their desire for light.

The lecture completed, arrangements were at once made for the short voyage of fifty miles to India. For this purpose a native brig was chartered, and a start was made soon after midnight. The weather was quite favorable, and the trip was accordingly of an exceedingly pleasant nature. Pamben was reached shortly before noon, but the Swami did not land until the afternoon. Then he went ashore in a small boat and was met at the jetty by His Highness the Raja of Ramnad, who evinced the deep pleasure he felt at meeting the Swami in the warmth of the welcome accorded him. Preparations had been made on the landing wharf for a formal reception, and here, under a pandal which was surrounded by decorations showing great taste, Mr. Nagalingam Pillai read the following address on behalf of the Pamben people.

“MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HOLINESS.

We greatly rejoice to welcome Your Holiness with hearts full of deepest gratitude and highest veneration—gratitude for having so readily and graciously consented to pay us a flying visit in spite of the numerous calls on you, and veneration for the many noble and excellent qualities that you possess and the great work you have so nobly undertaken to do which you have been discharging with conspicuous ability, utmost zeal and earnestness.

We truly rejoice to see that Your Holiness' efforts in sowing the seeds of Hindu philosophy on the cultured minds of the great Western nation, are being crowned with so much success that all round, we already see the bright and cheerful aspect of the bearing of excellent fruits in great abundance, and most humbly pray that Your Holiness will, during your sojourn in Aryâvartha, be graciously pleased to exert even a little more than what you did in the West to awaken the minds of your brethren in this our motherland, from the dreary life-long slumber and make them recall to their minds the long forgotten gospel of truth.

Our hearts are so full of sincerest affection, greatest reverence, and highest admiration towards Your Holiness—our great spiritual leader that we verily find it impossible to adequately express our feelings and therefore beg to conclude with an earnest and united prayer to the merciful Providence to bless Your Holiness with long life of usefulness and to grant you every thing that may tend to bring about the long lost feelings of universal brotherhood."

The Raja added to this a brief personal welcome which was remarkable for its depth of feeling, and then the Swami replied to the following effect.

"Our sacred motherland is a land of religion and philosophy—the birthplace of spiritual giants—the land of renunciation, where and where alone, from the most ancient to the most modern times, there has been the highest ideal of life open to man.

I have been in the countries of the West; have travelled through many lands, of many races, and each nation appears to me to have a particular prominent ideal running through its whole life, each ideal is the backbone of the national life. Not political, military power, not commercial supremacy nor mechanical genius, furnishes India with that backbone, but religion, and religion alone, is all that we have and mean to have. Spirituality has been always in India.

Great indeed are the manifestations of muscular power, and marvellous the manifestations of intellect expressing themselves through machines by the appliances of science; yet, none of these are more potent than the influence which spirit exerts upon the world.

The history of our race shows that India has always been most active. To-day, we are taught by men who ought to know better that the Hindu is mild and passive, till this has become a sort of proverb with the people of other lands. I discard the idea that India was ever passive. Nowhere has activity been more pronounced than in this blessed land of ours, and the great proof of this activity is that our most and magnanimous race still lives, and at every decade glorious career seems to take on fresh youth—undying and perishable. This activity is here but it is a peculiar human nature, to quote a rather common-place proverb that ‘nothing is like leather.’ Take for instance a shoemaker. He understands only shoemaking and thinks of nothing in this life except the manufacturing of shoes. A brick-layer understands nothing but brick-laying and lives on this alone in his life from day to day. The nature of this is plain. When the vibrations of light are intense, we do not see them, because we are so constituted that we cannot go beyond our own plane of vision. The Yogi with his spiritual introspection is able to see things through the materialistic veil of the vulgar crowds. The eyes of the whole world are now turned towards India for spiritual food, and India has to work for the benefit of all the races. Here alone is the best ideal for mankind, and Western scholars are now struggling to understand this Dharma which is enshrined in our Sanskrit Literature and which has been the characteristic of India through the ages.

At the dawn of history, no missionary went out to propagate the Hindu doctrines and dogmas, but a wonderful change is coming over us. Srî Baghavân says “whenever virtue subsides and immorality comes again to help the world.” Religious research has brought to us the fact that there is not a country possessing a good ethical code but has borrowed something of it from us and there is not one religion possessing good ethics but has derived it directly from us.

There has never been a time in the world’s history when there was a tyranny of the strong over the weak, robbery, and high handedness, as at the latter end of the nineteenth century. Everybody knows that there is no salvation except through the conquering of the desires, and that no man is free who is subject to the bondage of matter. This great truth all the nations are slowly coming to understand and appreciate. As soon as the disciple is in a position to grasp this truth, the words of the Guru come to his help. The Lord sends help to his own children in His Infinite mercy which never ceaseth and is ever flowing in all creeds. Our Lord is the Lord of all religions. This idea belongs to India alone and I challenge any one of you to find it in any other scripture of the world.

We Hindus have now been placed, under God's Providence, in a very critical and responsible position. The nations of the West are coming to us for spiritual help. A great moral obligation rests on the sons of India to fully equip themselves for the work of enlightening the world on the problems of human existence. One thing we may note with pride, that whereas you will find that good and great men of other countries take pride in tracing back their descent to some robber baron who lived in a mountain fortress and emerged from time to time to plunder passing wayfarers, and this to them is great, we Hindus, on the other hand, take pride in being the descendants of Rishis and sages, who lived in mountains and caves on roots and fruits, meditating on the Supreme. We may be now degraded and degenerated, but however degraded and degenerated we may be, we can become great if we only begin to work in right earnest on behalf of our religion.

Accept my hearty thanks for the kind and cordial reception you have given me. It is impossible for me to express my gratitude to H. H. the Rajah of Ramnad for his love towards me. If any good work has been done by me and through me, every bit of it India owes to this great man ; for it was he that conceived the idea of my going to Chicago, and it was he that put that idea into my head and persistently urged me on to accomplish it. Standing beside me, he is still hoping for more and more work, with all his old enthusiasm. I wish there were half a dozen more such Rajahs to take interest in our dear motherland and work for her amelioration in the spiritual line."

This closed the proceedings, and the Swami entered a carriage to be driven to the Raja's bungalow. At the instance of the Raja, the horses were at once removed and the carriage in this way drawn through the small town, His Highness himself assisting. The three days' stay here was of a pleasant character, and gave opportunity to large numbers of residents both of Pamben and the pilgrimage town of Ramesvarem, close at hand, to do honour to the great preacher. A visit was also paid to Ramesvarem Temple. This is one of the four most sacred temples of India, the other three being Jaggennath, Dvaraka and Badri Nath. In many respects this was one of the most interesting incidents of the tour. To the Swami himself it was especially so, for it recalled to him the first visit paid by him to the sacred spot, five years before, when, on foot and unknown he went there as one of the many thousands of Hindus who yearly make the pilgrimage. On this occasion it was very far otherwise. When nearing the Temple the Swami's carriage was met by a procession which included elephants, camel, horses, the temple insignia, native music, and other evidences of the highest respect a Hindu can pay to a man, and in this way the Temple was reached. The temple jewels were displayed to the Swami and his disciples, and after they had been conducted through the building, and its many architectural wonders pointed out—particularly the galleries supported by a thousand pillars—the Swami was asked to address the great crowd of people who had assembled. This he did in the following terms, Mr. Nagalingam acting as interpreter into Tamil.

“ It is in love that religion exists and not in ceremony ; in the pure and sincere love in the heart. Unless a man is pure in body and mind, his coming into a temple and worshipping Siva is useless. The prayers of those that are pure in mind and body will be answered by Siva, and those that are impure, and yet try to teach religion to others, will meet with a very bad end. External worship is only a symbol of internal worship ; but internal worship and purity are the real things. Without them, external worship would be of no avail. Therefore, you must all try to remember this. In modern times, people have become so degraded in this Kali Yuga that they think they can do anything ; if only they go to a holy place, their sins will be forgiven. If a man goes impure into a temple, he takes all the sins that were there already, and goes home a worse man than he left it. Tirtha is a place which is full of holy things and holy men. But if holy people live in a certain place, and if there is not one temple there, that is a Tirtha. If unholy people live in a place where there may be hundred temples, the Tirtha has vanished from that place. And it is most difficult to live in a Tirtha, for if sin committed in any ordinary place can easily be removed, sin committed in a Tirtha cannot be removed. This is the gist of all worship, to be pure and to do good to others. He who sees Siva in the poor, in the weak, and in the diseased, really worships Siva ; and if he sees Siva only in the image, his worship is only preliminary. With him who has served and helped one poor man seeing Siva in him, without thinking of his caste, or creed, or race, or anything, Siva is more pleased than with that man who sees Him only in temples.

“ A rich man had a garden and he had two gardeners. One of these gardeners was very lazy and did not work ; but when this rich man came to the garden, this lazy man would get up and fold his arms and say how beautiful is the face of my master, and dance before him. The other gardener would not talk much, but work hard, and produce all sorts of fruits and vegetables and carry them on his head, a long way off, to his master. Of these two gardeners, who would be more beloved by his master ? So Siva is that master, and this world is His garden, and there are two sorts of gardeners here : the one who is lazy, hypocritical, and does nothing, only talking about Siva’s eyes and nose and all that ; and the other who is taking care of Siva’s children, all that are poor and weak, all animals, and all His creation. Which of these would be more beloved by Siva ? Certainly he that serves His children. He who wants to serve the father must serve the children first. He who wants to serve Siva must serve His children—must serve this world first. It is said in Gita that those who serve the servants of God are His greatest servants. So you will bear this in mind. Let me tell you again that you must be pure and help any one who comes to you as much as it lies in your power. And this is good Karma. By the power of this, the heart becomes pure (Chitta Suddhi), and then Siva who is residing in every one will become manifest. He is always in the heart of every one. If there is dirt and dust on a mirror, we cannot see our image. So ignorance and wickedness are the dirt and dust that are on the mirror of our heart. This is the chief sin, selfishness, thinking of ourselves first. He who thinks 'I will eat first, I will have more money than others, and I will possess everything'; he who thinks I will get to heaven before others, I will get to Mukti before others,' is the selfish man. The unselfish man says 'I will be last, I do not care to go to heaven, I will even go to hell, if by doing that I can help my brothers.' This unselfishness is the test of religion. He who has more unselfishness is more spiritual and nearer to Siva. Whether he is learned or ignorant, whether he knows it or not, he is nearer to Siva than anybody else. And if a man is selfish, even though he has visited all the temples, seen all the places of pilgrimage, and painted himself like a leper, still he is further off from Siva."

It will be of interest to mention that in commemoration of the fact that the first spot in India visited by the Swami on his return from his Western Mission was Pamben the Rajah has had a monument erected there on which is the following inscription.

"Sathyamēva Jayathi. This monument erected by Bhaskara Sethupathy the Raja of Ramnad marks the sacred spot where His Holiness Swāmi Vivakānanda's blessed feet first trod on Indian soil together with the English disciples of His Holiness,' return from the Western Hemisphere where glorious and unprecedented success attended His Holiness' philanthropic labours to spread the religion of the Vedānta."

'Then came the short trip across to the mainland, and after breakfasting in one of the Chattrams provided by the charity of rich Hindus (in this case by the Raja) for the benefit of wayfarers, Tirupillani was reached, and an informal welcome given the Swami. It was evening when Ramnad came in sight. The journey from the sea-coast had been made by bullock cart, but when nearing Ramnad the Swami entered a boat which conveyed him across one of the large tanks which abound in Southern India. Thus the reception took place on the brink of the lake, which added considerably to the effect of the scene. The Raja, of course, took the leading part, and, having himself welcomed the Swami, introduced a number of the leading citizens of Ramnad. The firing of canon had announced the approach of the party, and on landing canon gave place to rockets, which were fired at frequent intervals from then until the procession, which was immediately formed, reached its goal. The Swami was driven in the state carriage, accompanied by the Raja's bodyguard, under the command of His Highness' brother, the Raja directing the course of the procession on foot. Torches flared on either side of the road, and both native and European music added life to the already lively proceedings, the latter playing "See the Conquering Hero Comes" both on the landing of the Swami and on his approach to the city proper. When half the distance had been traversed the Swami was asked by the Raja to take his seat in the handsome State Palanqueen, and in this way he reached the Sankara Villa. After a slight rest the Swami was led into the large audience hall which was crowded with people, who renewed the enthusiastic shouts which had greeted the Swami during the procession from the tank to the city. The Raja opened the proceedings in a speech full of eloquent eulogy, and called upon Raja Dinakara Sethupathi, his brother, to read the following address, which was afterwards presented to the Swami enclosed in a massive silver gilt casket, of very chaste workmanship :—

HIS MOST HOLINESS SRI PARAMAHAMSA, YATHI RAJA, DIKVIJIA KOLAHALA, SARVAMATHA SAMPRATHI-
 PANNA, PARAMA YOGESWARA, SRIMAT BHAGAVAN
 SREE RAMA KRISHNA PARAMAHAMSA KARAKAMALA
 SANJATHIA, RAJADHIRAJA SEVITHA, SREE VIVEKA-NANDA SWAMY.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HOLINESS,

We, the inhabitants of this ancient and historic Samasthānam of Sethu Bandha Rāmeswar otherwise known as Ramanathapuram or Rāmnad, beg, most cordially, to welcome you to this, our motherland. We deem it a very rare privilege to be the first to pay your Holiness our heart-felt homage on your landing in India, and that, on the shores sanctified by the foot-steps of that great Hero and our revered Lord —Sree Bhagavān Rāmachandra.

We have watched with feelings of genuine pride and pleasure the unprecedented success which has crowned your laudable efforts in bringing home to the master-minds of the West the intrinsic merits and excellence of our time-honored and noble religion. You have, with an eloquence that is unsurpassed and in language plain and unmistakable proclaimed to and convinced the cultured audiences in Europe and America that Hinduism fulfils all the requirements of the ideal of a universal religion and adapts itself to the temperament and needs of men and women of all races and creeds. Animated purely by a disinterested impulse, influenced by the best of motives and at considerable self-sacrifice your Holiness has crossed boundless seas and oceans to convey the message of truth and peace and to plant the flag of India's spiritual triumph and glory in the rich soil of Europe and America. Your Holiness has, both by precept and practice, shown the feasibility and importance of universal brotherhood. Above all, your labours in the West have indirectly and to a great extent tended to awaken the apathetic sons and daughters of India to a sense of the greatness and glory of their ancestral faith and create in them a genuine interest in the study and observance of their dear and priceless religion.

We feel we cannot adequately convey to you in words our feelings of gratitude and thankfulness to your Holiness for your philanthropic labours towards the spiritual regeneration of the east and the west. We cannot close this address without referring to the great kindness which your Holiness has always extended to our Rajah, who is one of your devoted disciples, and the honor and pride he feels by this gracious act of your Holiness's landing first on his territory is indescribable.

In conclusion, we pray to the Almighty to bless your Holiness with long life, health and strength to enable you to carry on the good work that has been so ably inaugurated by you.

With respects and love,

We beg to subscribe ourselves,

Your Holiness's most devoted and obedient disciples
and servants,

RAMNAD. }
25th January 1897. }

The Swami's reply follows in extenso :—

“ The longest night seems to be passing over, the sorrest trouble seems to have an end at last, the sleeping corpse seems to be waking, and a voice is coming unto us, away back where history and even tradition fails to peep into the gloom of the past, coming down from there, reflected as it were from peak to peak of the infinite Himalaya of knowledge, and of love, and of work, which is this mother-land of ours, India—a voice is coming unto us, gentle, firm, and yet unmistakable in its utterances, and is gaining volume as days pass by, and behold the sleeper is awakening, like a breeze from the Himalayas, it is bringing like unto almost the dead bones and muscles, the lethargy is passing away, and only the blind do not see, or the perverted will not see, that she is awakening, this mother-land of ours, from her deep long sleep. None can resist any more; never is she going to sleep any more, no untoward powers can hold her back any more; for the infinite giant is rising to her feet.

Your Highness and gentlemen of Râmnad, accept my heart felt thanks for the cordiality and kindness with which you have received me. I feel that you are cordial and kind; for, heart speaks unto heart better than any language of the mouth, spirit speaks unto spirit in silence, and yet in most unmistakable language, and I feel it in the heart of my heart. Your Highness of Râmnad, if there has been any work done by my humble self in the cause of our religion and our mother-land in the Western countries, if any little work has been done in rousing the sympathies of our own people in drawing their attention to the inestimable jewels that are lying buried, as it were, deep round about their own home, and they know it not, if they are being called to go and drink out of the eternal fountain of water which is flowing perennially by their own homes and not die of thirst or drink of filthy ditch water elsewhere, in blindness of ignorance, if anything has been done to rouse our people somewhat towards action, to make them understand that no more shall there be lethargy, to make them understand that of everything religion and religion alone is the life of India, and when it goes India will die, in spite of politics in spite of social reforms, in spite of Kubara's wealth poured upon the head of every one of her children, if anything has been done towards this, this India and every country where any work has been done owes it to you, Rajah of Ramnad. For it was you who gave me the idea first and it was you who persistently excited me on towards the work. You, as it were, intuitively understood what was going to be, and took me up by the hands, helped me all along, and have never ceased to encourage me, and well it is that you should rejoice for the success first, and meet it is that I should land in your territory first on my return to India. Great works are to be done, wonderful powers have to be worked out, we have to teach other nations many things, as has been told to you already by your Rajah. This is the mother-land of philosophy, and of spirituality, of ethics, and of sweetness, gentleness, and human love. These still exist, and my experience of the world leads me to stand on a firm ground, and make the bold statement that India is still the first and foremost of all the nations in the world in these respects. Look at this little phenomenon. There have been immense political changes within the last four or five years. Gigantic organisations undertaking to subvert the whole of existing institutions in different countries and meeting with a certain amount of success have been working all over the Western world. Ask our people if they heard anything of them? Not a word. But that there was a Parliament of Religions in Chicago, and that there was a Sanyâsin sent over from India to that Parliament, and that he was very well received, and that since that time he has been working all over the Western countries, the poorest beggar has known. I have heard that our masses are dense, they do not want any information, they do not care for any information. Sometimes, I had foolishly a leaning towards that opinion, but experience is a far more glorious teacher than any amount of speculation, or any amount of books written by globe-trotters and hasty observers. This experience teaches me that they are not dense, they are not slow, they are as eager and thirsty for information as any race under the sun ; but then each nation has its own part to play, and naturally as well, each nation has its own peculiarity and individuality, with which it is born. One represents, as it were, one peculiar note in this harmony of nations, and this is its very life, its vitality. In it is the backbone, the foundation, and the bedrock, of the national life and here in this blessed land, the foundation, the backbone, the life-centre is religion and religion alone. Let others talk of politics, of the glory of acquisition of the immense wealth poured in by trade, of the power and spread of commercialism, of the glorious fountain of physical liberty, the Hindu mind does not understand it, does not want to understand it. Touch him on spirituality, on religion, on God, on the soul, on the infinite, on spiritual freedom, the lowest peasant, I assure you, is better informed in India than many a so-called philosopher in other lands. I have said, gentlemen, that we have to teach something to the world yet. This is the very reason, the raison d'etre, that this nation should live on in spite of hundreds of years of persecution, in spite of nearly a thousand years of foreign rule and foreign oppression. This nation still lives; the raison d'etre is because it still holds to God, to the treasure-house of religion and spirituality.

In this land, religion and spirituality are still the fountains which will have to overflow and flood the world, to bring in new life and new vitality to the Western and other nations, now almost borne down, half-killed and degraded by political ambition and social scheming. From out of the many voices, consonant and dissentient, from out of the medley of sounds filling the Indian atmosphere, rises up supreme, striking, and full, one note, and that is renunciation. Give up! That is the watchword of the Indian books. This world is a delusion of two days. The present life is of five minutes. Behind is the infinite beyond and beyond ; go there. This continent is illumined with brave and gigantic minds and intelligences who even think of this so called infinite universe as a mudpuddle ; beyond and still beyond they go. Time, even infinite time, is but non-existence. Beyond and beyond time they go. Space is nothing to them ; beyond that they want to go, and this is the very soul of religion. This transcendentalism, the struggle to go beyond, daring to tear the veil off the face of nature and have a glimpse of the beyond, at any risk, at any price, is the characteristic of my nation. Do you want to enthuse them, here you are, that will enthuse them. Your talks of politics, of social regeneration, your talks of money-making, and commercialism—aye they roll down like water from a duck's back. This then, this spirituality, is what you have to teach the world. Have we got to learn anything else, have we to learn anything from the world? We have, perhaps a little in material knowledge, in the power of organisation, in the ability to handle powers, organizing powers, and bringing the best results out of the smallest of causes. This perhaps to a certain extent we may learn from the West and so long as all men in a country cannot give up entirely, although that is our ideal, if any one preaches in India the ideal of eating and drinking and making merry, if any one wants to apotheosise the material world into "God for India," that man is a liar ; he has no place in this holy land, the Indian mind does not want to hear him. Aye, in spite of the sparkle and glitter of Western civilisation, in spite of all its polish and its marvellous manifestation of power, I tell them, standing upon this platform, to their teeth, it is all vain. It is vanity of vanities. God alone lives. The soul alone lives. Spirituality alone lives. Hold on to that.

Yet, some sort of materialism, toned down to our own use perhaps, would be a blessing to many of our brothers who are not yet ripe for the highest truths. This is the one mistake made in every country and in every society, and it is a greatly regrettable thing that in India, where it was always understood, the same mistake, of late, has been made. Another mistake is this. What is my method need not be yours. The Sanyâsin, as you all know, is the ideal of the Hindu's life and every one by our Shastras is compelled to give up, and he who does not is not a Hindu, and has no more right to call himself a Hindu, he is disobedient and disloyal to his books. Every Hindu who has tasted the fruits of this world must give up in the latter part of his life. We know this is the ideal—to give up after seeing and experiencing the vanity of things. Having found out that the heart of the material world is a mere hollow, that in its centre are only handfuls of ashes, give it up and go back. The mind is circling forward, as it were, towards the senses, and that mind has to circle backwards; the Pravritti has to stop and the Nivritti has to begin. That is the ideal. But that ideal can only be realised after a certain amount of experience. We cannot teach the child the truth of renunciation, the child is a born optimist, his whole life is in his senses, his whole life is one mass of sense-enjoyment. So are the child-like men in every society. They require a certain amount of experience, of enjoyment, to see through the vanity of it, and then renunciation will come to them. There have been ample provisions for that in our books ; but unfortunately, later times, there is a tendency to bind every one down by the same laws as those by which the Sanyâsin is bound, and that is a great mistake. A good deal of the poverty and the misery that you see in India need not be but for that. A poor man's life is hemmed in and bound down by tremendous spiritual and ethical laws for which he has no need. Let hands be off, let the poor fellow enjoy a little, and he will raise himself up and then renunciation will come to him by itself. In this line, gentlemen, perhaps we can learn something from the Western people, but we must be very cautious in learning these things. I am very sorry to say that most of the examples one meets nowadays having imbibed the western ideas are more or less failures. Here are the two mountains before our path in India, the Scylla of old orthodoxy, and the Charybdis of modern European civilisation. Of these, I vote for the old orthodoxy, and not for the Europeanised system ; for, the old orthodox man may be ignorant, he may be crude, but he is a man, he has a faith, he has strength, he stands on his own feet, while the Europeanised man has no backbone, he is a bundle of heterogeneous ideas picked up at random from every source—unassimilated, undigested, unharmonised. He stands not on his own feet, his head is turning round day and night, and where is the motive power of his work? A few patronising pats from our "mylords," the English people ; his reforms, his vehement vituperations against the evils of certain social customs have, as the mainspring of all these actions, some European patronage. Why are some of our customs called evils? Because the Europeans say so. That is about the reason he gives. I would not have that ; stand and die in your strength ; if there is any sin in the world, it is weakness ; avoid all weakness, weakness is death, weakness is sin.

Those old orthodox people were staunch and were men while these unbalanced creatures are not yet formed into distinct beings. What to call them—men, women or animals? But there are some glorious examples, and the one I want to present before you is your Raja of Ramnad. Here, you have a man than whom there is a no more zealous Hindu throughout the length and breadth of this land, here you have a prince than whom there is no prince in this land better informed in all affairs, oriental or occidental. Here he is harmonised taking from every nation whatever he can that is good. Sraddhadhānah subham vidyām ādadītāvarād api, antyad api param dharmam strīratnam dushkulād api. “Learn any good knowledge with all force from the lowest caste. Learn the way to freedom, even from the Pariah, by serving him; from the lowest caste, the lowest family, take a great woman in marriage, a jewel of a woman in marriage.” Such is the law laid down by our great and peerless legislator, the divine Manu. This is true. Learn from every nation, stand on your own feet, assimilate what you can, take what is of use to you, and mind, as ‘Hindus,’ everything else must be subordinated to that. Each man as it were, has a mission in life which is the result of all his infinite past Karma. Upon each of you, men of this city, there is a mission with which you were born, and that is the whole of the infinite past life of your glorious nation. Aye, your millions of ancestors are watching, as it were every action of yours; take care. And what is the mission with which every Hindu child is born? Do you not read the proud declaration of Manu as regards the Brahmin, the birth of the Brahmin—Brāhmano jāyamāno hi prithivyām adhijāyate Isvaras sarva-bhūtāndm dharmakosasya guptaye,—“for the protection of the treasury of religion.” I would say that is the mission of every child, boy or girl, born in this blessed land, "for the protection of the treasury of religion." And every other question in life must be subordinated to that one principal theme. That is the law of harmony in music. There may be a nation where the theme of life is political supremacy and religion, and everything else must become subordinate to that one great theme of their life. But here is another nation where the one great theme of life is spirituality and renunciation, whose one watchword is that this world is a delusion of three days, vanity, and everything else, science or knowledge, enjoyments or powers, name or fame, or wealth, everything else, must be subordinated to that. The secret of your Râja's character is that this has been done in his case, he has subordinated his knowledge of European sciences and European learning, he has subordinated his wealth, and his position, and his name, to that one principal theme which is inborn in every Hindu child—the spirituality and purity of the race. Therefore, between these two, the case of the man who has the whole of that life-spring of the race, spirituality and who has nothing else—that is the old crude orthodoxy—and the other man, whose hands are full of western imitation-jewels but has no hold on the life-giving principle, spirituality, of these I do not doubt that every one here will agree that we should choose the first, the orthodox because there is some hope in him. He has a hold, he has the national theme, he will live, the other will die. Just as in the case of individuals, if the principle of the life is undisturbed, if the principal function of that individual life is present, any other injuries received as regards any other functions are not serious—any other function never becomes constant. So long as this principal function of our life is not disturbed nothing can destroy our nation. But mark you, if you give up that spirituality, leaving it aside to go after the materialising civilisation of the West, the result will be in three generations you will be an extinct race ; because, the backbone of the nation will be broken down, the foundation upon which the national edifice has been built will be broken away and the result will be a smash all round, annihilation.

Therefore my friends, this is the way out, that first and foremost we must keep a firm hold on that spirituality—that inestimable gift handed down to us by our ancient forefathers. Did you ever hear of a country, where the greatest kings tried to trace their descent, not to kings, not to old barons and robbers living in old castles, and coming down on poor travellers, but to semi-naked sages in the forests? Did you ever hear of such a land? This is the land. In other countries great priests try to trace their descent to some king, here the greatest kings would trace their descent to some ancient priest. Therefore, whether you believe in spirituality or not, for the sake of the national life, you have to get a hold on that spirituality and keep to it. Then stretch the other hand out and get all you can from other races, but everything must be subordinated to that one ideal of life and out of that a wonderful, glorious, future India will come—I am sure it is coming—greater than India ever was. Sages will spring up greater than all the ancient sages, and your ancestors will not only be satisfied, but I am sure, they will be proud, from their positions in other worlds, to look down upon their descendants, so glorious, and so great. Let us all work hard, my brethren, this is no time to sleep. On our work depends the coming of the India of the future. She is there ready waiting. She was only sleeping. Up and awake her, and let her be seated on her eternal throne, rejuvenated, more glorious than she ever was—this motherland of ours. And may He who is the Siva of the Sivites, the Vishnu of the Vaisnavites, the Karma of the Karmis, the Buddha of the Buddhists, the Jina of the Jains, the Jehovah of the Christians and the Jews, the Allah of the Mahomedans, the Lord of every sect, the Brahman of the Vedântists, He, the all-pervading, whose glory has been known wholly in this land—for, this idea never existed anywhere else, nowhere was the idea of God, perhaps you are astonished at my assertion, but show me any idea of God from any scripture ; they have only clan-gods, God of the Jews, God of the Arabs, and of such and such a race, and their God is fighting the Gods of the other races, and the idea of that beneficent, most merciful God, our father, our mother, our friend, the friend of our friends, the soul of our souls is here and here alone—May He bless us, may he help us, may He give strength unto us, energy unto us, to carry this idea into practice. May that which we have listened to and studied become food in us, may it become strength in us, may it become energy in us to help others, may we, the teacher and the taught, not be jealous of each other ! Peace, peace, peace, in the name of Hari.”

The Raja closed the proceedings by suggesting that the Swami’s visit to Ramnad should be commemorated by a subscription from the town to the Madras Famine Fund.

During his stay in the city the Swami received numerous visitors, in addition to lecturing in the Christian Missionary Schoolroom, very kindly lent for the purpose, and attending a Durbar at the palace held in his honor. At the latter he received further addresses in Tamil and Sanscrit, and made a short but interesting speech of a character personal to the Raja, of whom he spoke as a man of the highest temporal rank yet with his heart ever fixed on God. He conferred on him the title of Rajarishi, the Princely Sage. In addition to this he made a little speech into a phonograph, in which he emphasised the need for Sakti (power) worship in India. This visit to the Palace was paid on the Sunday evening, and at midnight a fresh start was made on the journey North.

Paramakudi was the first stopping place after leaving Ramnad, and there was a demonstration on a large scale, including presentation of the following address :—

SREEMAT VIVEKANANDA SWAMI.

We, the citizens of Paramakudi, respectfully beg to accord to your Holiness a most hearty welcome to this place after your successful spiritual campaign of nearly four years in the Western world.

We share with our countrymen the feelings of joy and pride at the philanthropy which prompted you to attend the Parliament of Religions held at Chicago and lay before the representatives of the religious world the sacred but hidden treasures of our ancient land. You have by your wide exposition of the sacred truths contained in the Vedic literature, disabused the enlightened minds of the West of the prejudices till recently entertained by them against our ancient faith and convinced them of its universality and adaptability for intellects of all shades and in all ages.

The presence amongst us of your Western disciples is proof positive that your religious teachings have not only been understood in theory but have also borne practical fruits. The magnetic influence of your august person reminds us of our ancient holy Rishis whose realisation of the Self by asceticism and self-control made them the true guides and preceptors of the human race.

In conclusion we most earnestly pray to the All Merciful that your Holiness may long be spared to continue to bless and spiritualise the whole mankind.

With best regards.

We beg to subscribe ourselves,
Your Holiness' most obedient and devoted Disciples and Servants.

In the course of his reply Swami said,—

“ It is almost impossible to express my thanks for the kindness and cordiality with which you have received me. But, if I may be permitted to say so, I will add that my love for my country, and especially for my countrymen, will be the same whether they receive me with the utmost cordiality or spurn me from the country. For we read in the Gīta that Sri Krishna says—men should work for work's sake only, and love for love's sake. The work that has been done in the Western world has been very little ; there is no one present here who cannot do a hundred times more work than has been done by me there in the West, and I am anxiously waiting for the day when mighty minds will arise, gigantic spiritual minds, ready to go forth out of India to the ends of the world, teaching spirituality and renunciation, which ideas came from the forests of India, and belong to Indian soil alone. There come periods in the history of human race when, as it were, whole nations are seized with a sort of world-weariness, when they find that all their plans are, as it were, slipping between their fingers, old institutions and systems are crumbling into dust, hopes are all blighted, and everything seems to be out of joint. Two attempts have been made in the world to found social life ; the one was upon religion, and the other was upon social necessity. The one was founded upon spirituality, the other upon materialism, the one upon transcendentalism, the other upon realism, the one looks beyond the horizon of this little material world of ours and is bold enough to begin life there, even apart from the other. The other, the second, is content to take its stand on the things around and expects to have a firm footing upon that. Curiously enough it seems that at times the spiritual side prevails, and again the materialistic side, in wavelike motions following each other. In the same country there will be different tides; at one time the full flood of materialistic ideas—everything in this life will become glorious before prosperity, education pouring in, more food, more pleasure—and then that will degrade and degenerate. Along with the prosperity will rise to white heat all the inborn jealousy and hatred of the human race, competition and merciless cruelty will be the watchword of the day. To quote a very common-place and not very good English proverb, "Everyone for himself, and the devil take care of the hindmost"; that becomes the motto of the day. Then people think that the whole scheme of this life was failure, and the world would be destroyed did not spirituality come to the rescue, lend a helping hand to the sinking world. And then the world gets new hope, finds a new basis for a new building, and another wave of spirituality comes that again degenerates. As a rule spirituality brings a class of men who lay exclusive claim to the special powers of the world, and the immediate effect of this is a reaction towards materialism which opens the door to scores of exclusive claims until the time comes when not only all the spiritual powers of the race, but all its material powers and privileges are centred in the hands of a very few, and these few, standing on the necks of the masses of the people, want to rule them. Then society has to help itself, materialism comes to the rescue. The same thing is going on now, if you look at India, our motherland. That you are hear today to welcome one who went to Europe to preach your spirituality would have been impossible had not the materialism of Europe opened the way for it. Materialism has come to the rescue of India in a certain sense, by throwing open the doors of life to everyone, by destroying exclusive privileges of certain castes, by opening up to discussion the inestimable jewels hidden away in the hands of a very few, and even they have lost the use of them. Half has been stolen and lost, and the half which remains is in the hands of men who, like dogs in the manger, do not eat themselves or allow others to eat of them. On the other hand the political systems that we are struggling for in India have been in Europe for ages, have been tried for centuries, and have been found wanting. One after another, institutions, systems, and everything connected with political governments have been condemned as useless, and Europe is restless, does not know where to go. The material tyranny is tremendous. The wealth and power of a country are in the hands of a few men who do no work, but can manipulate the work of millions of human beings. By this power they can deluge the whole earth with blood. Religion and everything are under their feet; they stand and rule supreme. The western world is governed by a handful of Shylocks. All these things that you hear about—constitutional government, and freedom, and liberty, and parliaments—are but jokes. The West is groaning under the tyranny of the Shylocks, and the East is groaning under the tyranny of the Priests; each must keep the other in check. Do not think that one alone is to help the world. In this creation of the impartial Lord He has made equal every particle in the universe. The worst, most demoniacal man, has some virtues which the greatest saint has not, and the lowest worm may have certain things which the highest man may not have. The poor labourer here whom you think has so little enjoyment in life, has not your intellect, cannot understand the Vedânta Philosophy, and so forth, but compared to your body his body is nothing like as sensitive to pain as yours. You may almost cut him to pieces and he heals up the next day. His life is in the senses, but he enjoys there. His life is one of equilibrium and balance. Whether on the ground of materialism, or of intellect, or of spirituality the amount that is given by the Lord to every one impartially is exactly the same. Therefore you must not think that we are the saviours of the world. We can teach the world a good many things, and we can learn from the world a good many things too. What we can teach the world is what the world is waiting for. The whole of western civilisation will crumble to pieces in the next fifty years if there is no spiritual foundation. It is too useless and hopeless to attempt to govern mankind with the sword. You will find that the very centres from which such ideas sprang up, government by force, are the very first centres to degrade and degenerate and crumble to pieces. Europe, the centre of the manifestation of material energy, will crumble into dust within fifty years if she is not mindful to change her position, to shift her ground and take in spirituality as the basis of mankind. And what will save Europe is the religion of the Upanishads. Apart from the different sects and philosophies and scriptures there is one underlying doctrine common to all our sects, which can change the whole tendency of the world, belief in the soul of man, the âtman. Everywhere in India, with Hindus, Jains and Buddhists, there it is, the idea of a spiritual soul which is the receptacle of all power. And you know well, too, that there is no one system in India which tells you you can get your power, or purity, or perfection from outside, but that they are your birthright, your nature. Impurity is a mere super-imposition, under which your real nature has become hidden. But the real you is already perfect, already strong. You do not require any assistance to govern yourselves ; you are already self-restrained. The only difference is in knowing it or not knowing it. Therefore the one difficulty has been summed up in the word avidya. What makes the difference between God and man, between the saint and the sinner? Only ignorance. What is the difference between the highest man and the lowest worm that crawls under your feet? Ignorance ; that makes all the difference. For inside that little crawling worm is lodged infinite power, and knowledge, and purity, the infinite divinity of God Himself. It is unmanifested ; it will have to be manifested. This is the one great truth India has to teach to the world, because it is nowhere else. This is spirituality, the science of the soul. What makes a man stand up and work? Strength. Strength is goodness, weakness is sin. If there is one word that you find come out like a bomb from the Upanishads, bursting like a bombshell upon masses of ignorance, it is the word fearlessness. And it is the only religion that wants to be taught, that word fearlessness. Either speaking of this world or of God true it is, for it is fear that is the sure cause of degradation and sin. It is fear that brings misery, fear that brings death, that brings everything else ; and what causes fear? Ignorance of our own nature. Heir apparent to the Emperor of Emperors, you are the parts and parcels of the substance of God Himself. Nay, according to the Advaita you are God Himself and have forgotten your own nature in thinking of yourselves as little men. We have fallen and want to make differences— I am a little better than you, or you than I and so on. This is the great lesson India has to give, and, see you, it changes the whole aspect of things, because first of all you look at men and animals through other eyes than you have been looking at them. And this world is no more a battle field where each soul is born to struggle with every other soul, and the strongest gets the victory and the weakest goes to death. It becomes a play ground where the Lord like a child is playing, and we are his playmates, His fellow workers. This is a play, however terrible, hideous and dangerous it may appear. We have mistaken it. When we have known the nature of the soul, hope comes to the weakest, to the most degraded sinner, to the most miserable. Only, declares your Sâstra, despair not. For you are the same whatever you do, and you cannot change your nature. Nature itself cannot destroy nature. Your nature is pure. It may be hidden for millions of æons, but at last it will conquer and come out. Therefore it brings hope to every one and not despair. Its teaching is not through fear ; it teaches not of devils who are always on the watch to snatch you if you miss your footing. It has nothing to do with devils, but says that you have taken your fate in your own hands. Your own Karma has manufactured for you this body, and nobody did it for you. The Omnipresent Lord has been hidden through ignorance, and the responsibility is on yourself. You have not to think that you were brought into the world without your choice, and left in this most horrible place, but you know that you have manufactured it yourself, bit by bit, just as you are doing at this very moment. You yourself eat ; nobody eats for you. You assimilate what you eat ; no one does it for you. You make blood, and muscles and body out of the food ; nobody does it for you. So you have done all the time, one link in a chain explains the infinite chain. If it is true for one moment that you manufacture your body it is true for every moment that has been or will come. And all the responsibility of good and evil is on you. This is the great hope. What I have done I can undo. And at the same time our religion does not take off from mankind, the mercy of the Lord. That must be there. On the other hand he stands beside this tremendous current of good and evil, he the bondless, the ever-merciful, is always ready to help us to the other shore, for His mercy is great, Râmânûja says, and it always comes to the pure in heart. Thus your spirituality, in certain senses, must have to come to form the basis of the new orders of society. If I had had more time I could have shown you how the West has yet more to learn from some of the conclusions of the Advaita, for in these days of materialistic science the ideal of the Personal God does not count for much. But yet if a man has even a very crude form of religion, wants any number of temples, and form, enough to satisfy all mankind living to-day in the world, if he wants a Personal God to love, we have such noble ideas of Personal God as never were attained anywhere else in the world. If a man wants to be a very great rationalist—to satisfy his reason—it is here also that we can give him the most rational ideas of the Impersonal.

The Swami concluded by repeating his thanks for the welcome accorded him.

At Manamadura, the next halting place, the following address was presented to the Swami :—

TO SRI SWAMI VIVEKANANDA.

MOST REVERED SIR—

We, the Zemindar and citizens of Sivaganga and Manamadura beg to offer you a most hearty welcome. In our wildest dreams, in the most sanguine moments of our life we never contemplated that you, sir, who were so near our hearts would be in such close proximity to our homes. The first wire intimating your inability to come to Sivaganga cast a deep gloom on our hearts, and but for the subsequent silver lining on the cloud our disappointment must have been incurable. When we first heard that you consented to honor our place with your presence we thought we had realised our highest ambition. The mountain promised to come to Mahomet, and our joy knew no bounds. The mountain was obliged to withdraw its consent and our worst fears were raised that we might not be able even to go to the mountain, till you, sir, were graciously pleased to give way to our importunities.

The noble self-sacrificing spirit with which, despite the almost insurmountable difficulties of the voyage you have conveyed the grandest message of the East to the West, the masterly way in which the mission has been executed and the marvellous unparalleled success which has crowned your philanthropic efforts have earned for you an undying glory. At a time when Western bread-winning materialism was making the strongest inroads on Indian Religious convictions, when the sayings and writings of our sages were beginning to be numbered, the advent of a new master like you has already marked an era in the annals of religious advancement, and we hope that in the fulness of time you will succeed in disintegrating the dross that is temporarily covering the genuine gold of Indian Philosophy, and casting it in the powerful mint of your intellect will make it current coin throughout the whole globe. The Catholicity with which you were able triumphantly to bear the flag of Indian Philosophic thought among the heterogeneous religionists assembled in the Parliament of Religions enables us to hope that at no distant date you, just like your contemporary in the political sphere, will rule an empire over which the sun never sets, with this difference, that hers is an empire over matter, and yours will be over mind. We earnestly pray to the Almighty that as she has beaten all record in political history by the length and beneficence of her reign, you will be spared long enough to consummate the labor of love that you have so disinterestedly undertaken, and so to outshine all your predecessors in spiritual history.

We are,
Most Revered Sir
Your most dutiful and devoted Servants.

The Swami's reply was to the following effect :—

“ I cannot express the deep debt of gratitude which you have laid upon me by the kind and warm welcome which has just been accorded to me by you. Unfortunately I am just now not in a condition to make a very big speech, however I may wish it. In spite of these beautiful adjectives which our Sanscrit friend has been so kind as to apply to me, after all, I have a body, foolish though it may be, and body always follows the promptings and conditions and laws of matter. As such there is such a thing as fatigue and weariness as regards the material body. It is a great sight to see the wonderful amount of joy and appreciation expressed, in every part of the country almost, for the little work that has been done by me in the West. I take it only in this sense ; I want to apply it to those who are coming in future, that if just the little bit of work that has been done by me gets such approbation from the nation, what must be the approbation that spiritual giants coming after us, great souls, world movers, will get from this nation of ours? India is the land of religion ; the Hindu understands religion and religion alone. Centuries of education have been always in that line, and the result is here, that it is the one concern in life, and you can understand well that it is so. It is not necessary that every one should be a shop-keeper ; it is not necessary even that everyone should be a school-master ; it is not necessary that everyone should be a fighter, but in this world of harmony there will be different nations producing the harmony of result. Well, perhaps we are fated by the Divine Providence to play the spiritual note in this harmony of nations and is what rejoices me, seeing that we have not yet lost the glorious traditions which have been handed down to us by the most glorious forefathers of whom any nation can be proud. It gives me hope, it gives me almost faith adamantine in the destiny of the race. It cheers me, not the personal attention paid to me, but that the heart of the nation is sound. There it is still ; India is still living ; who says it is dead ? But they want to see us active. That is not our field. If a man wants to see us active on the field of battle he will be disappointed, just as we would be disappointed if we hoped to see a military nation active on the field of spirituality. But let them come here and see how the nation is living, equally active and as alive as ever. It leads me to dispel the idea that we have degenerated at all. So far so good. But I have to say a few harsh words. I hope you will take them kindly. For the complaint has just been made that European Materialism has well nigh swamped us. It is not all the fault of Europeans, but mainly ours. We as Vedântists must always look at things from an introspective standpoint, from its subjective relations. We as Vedântists know for sure that there is no power in the universe to injure us unless we first injure ourselves. One-fifth of the population of India have been Mahomedans. Just as before that going further back, two-thirds of the population in ancient times had become

Buddhists, one-fifth are now Mahomedans. Christians are already more than a million. Whose fault is it? One of our historians says in ever-memorable language—Why should these poor wretches starve and die of thirst when the perennial fountain of life is flowing by? The question is what did we do for these? Why should they become Mahomedans? I heard of an honest girl in England who was going to become wicked—a street walker—and when a lady asked her not to do it her reply was, “that is the only way I can find sympathy, none will come to help me now, but let me be a fallen, down-trodden woman, and then these merciful ladies will come, take me to their homes and do everything they can for me, but not now.” We are weeping for them now, but what did we do for them before? Let us ask every one of us, what have we learnt ourselves, each one of us and taking hold of the torch in our own hands, how far did we carry it? That we did not do was our own fault, our own Karma. Blame none, blame our own Karma. Materialism, or Mahomedanism, or Christianity, or any other ism in the world could never have succeeded but that you allowed them. No bacilli can attack in the human frame until it is degraded and degenerated by vice, and bad food, and privation, and exposure; the healthy man passes scatheless through masses of all sorts of poisonous bacilli. We did not help them then. Therefore this is the first question we should ask ourselves. And yet there is time. Give up all those old discussions, old fights about things which are meaningless, which are nonsensical in their very nature. Think of the last 600 or 700 years of degradation, when grown up men by hundreds have been discussing for years whether we should drink a glass of water with the right hand or the left, whether the hand should be washed three times or four times, whether five times we should gurgle or six times. What can you expect from men who pass their lives in discussing such momentous questions as these ; and writing most learned philosophies on these questions ! There is a danger of our religion getting into the kitchen. We are neither Vedântists most of us now, nor Paurânicos, nor Tântrics. We are just "Don't-touchists." Our religion is kitchen. Our God is the cooking pot and our religion is "Don't touch me, I am holy." If this goes on for another century, every one of us will be in the lunatic asylum. It is a sure sign of softening of the brain when the mind cannot grasp higher problems of life ; all originality is lost, the mind has lost all its strength, its activity, and its power of thought, and just tries to go round and round the smallest curve it can find. This has first to be thrown overboard, and you must stand up, be active, and strong, and then there is yet an infinite treasure, the treasure our forefathers have left for you, a treasure that the whole world requires to-day. The world will die if this treasure is not distributed. Bring it out, distribute it broadcast. Says Vyâsa, giving alone is the one work in this Kali Yuga, and of all the gifts, giving spiritual life is the highest gift possible, the next gift is secular knowledge, the next saving a life of man, and the last giving food to some one. Of food we have given enough; no nation is more charitable than we. So long as there is a piece of bread in the home of the beggar he will give half of it. Such a phenomenon can only be observed in India. We have enough of that, let us go for the other two, the gift of spiritual and secular knowledge. And if we all of us were brave and had a stout heart, and with absolute sincerity put our shoulders to the wheel, in twenty five years the whole problem would be solved, and there would be none left here to fight, but the whole Indian world would be once more Aryan. This is all I have to tell you now. I am not given much to talking about plans ; I rather prefer to do and show, than talk about my plans. I have my plans, and mean to work them out if the Lord wills it, and if life is given unto me. I do not know whether I shall succeed or not, but it is a great thing to take up an ideal in life which is great, and then give up the whole life to it. For what is the value of life else, this vegetating, little, low, life of man? Subordinating it to one high ideal is the only value that life has. This is the great work to be done in India, and welcome the present revival, and would be a fool if I lost the opportunity of striking the iron while it is hot.

At Madura, the Swami occupied the beautiful bungalow of the Raja of Ramnad and was in the afternoon presented with an address in a velvet case which read as follows:—

MOST REVERED SWAMI.

We the Hindu Public of Madura beg to offer you our most heartfelt and respectful welcome to our ancient and holy city. We realize in you a living example of the Hindu Sanyāsi, who renouncing all worldly ties and attachments calculated to lead to the gratification of the self, is worthily engaged in the noble duty of living for others and endeavouring to raise the spiritual condition of mankind. You have demonstrated in your own person that the true essence of the Hindu Religion is not necessarily bound up with the rules and rituals, but it is sublime philosophy capable of giving peace and solace to the distressed and afflicted.

You have taught America and England to admire that philosophy and that religion which seeks to elevate every man in the best manner suited to his capacities and environments. Although your teachings have for the last three years been delivered in and from foreign lands they have not been the less eagerly devoured in this country and they have not a little tended to counteract the growing materialism imported from a foreign soil.

India lives unto this day for it has a mission to fulfil in the spiritual ordering of the universe; the appearance of a soul like you at the close of this cycle of the Kali Yuga is to us a sure sign of the incarnation in the near future of great souls through whom that mission shall be fulfilled.

Madura, the seat of ancient learning, Madura the favoured city of God Sundareswara the holy Dwadsantakshetram of Yogis, lags behind no other Indian city in its warm admiration of your exposition of Indian Philosophy and in its grateful acknowledgments of your priceless services for humanity.

We pray that you may be blessed with a long life of vigour and strength and usefulness.

The Swami replied in the following terms :—

I wish I could live in your midst for several days, and fulfil the conditions that have just been pointed out by your most worthy Chairman of relating to you my experiences in the West, and the result of all my labours for the last four years, and so forth. But, unfortunately, even Swâmis have bodies and the continuous travelling and speaking that I have had to undergo for the last three weeks makes it impossible for me to make a very long speech, even this evening. I will therefore satisfy myself with thanking you very cordially for the kindness that has been shown to me and reserve other things for some day in the future, under better conditions of health, and when we have time to talk over more various subjects than we can do in so short a time this evening. One fact comes prominently to my mind just now, being in Madura, as the guest of one of your well-known citizens and nobleman, I allude to the Raja of Râmnad. Perhaps most of you are well aware that it was the Raja who first put the idea into my mind of going to Chicago, and it was he who all the time supported it with all his heart and influence, and a good deal, therefore, of the praise that has been bestowed on me in this address ought to go to this very noble gentleman of Southern India. I only wish that instead of becoming a Raja he had become a Sanyâsin, for that is what he is really fit for.

Wherever there is anything required in some other part of the world the compliment will find its way to the part which it is going to supply with new life. This is true in the physical world, as well as in the spiritual. If there is a want of spirituality in one part of the world, and at the same time that spirituality exists any where else, whether we consciously struggle for it or not, that spirituality will find its way to the part where it is needed, and balance the disturbance. In the history of the human race, not once or twice, but again and again, it has been the destiny of the India of the past to supply spirituality to the world, and, as such, we find that wherever either by mighty conquest or by commercial supremacy, different parts of the world have been kneaded into one whole race, and bequests have been made from one corner to the other, each nation as it were poured forth its own quota, either political, social, or spiritual. India's contribution to the sum total of human knowledge has been spirituality, philosophy. These she contributed long even before the rising of the Persian Empire ; the second time was during the Persian Empire ; for the third time during the ascendancy of the Greeks ; for the fourth time, during the ascendancy of the English, she is going to fulfil the same destiny once more. As Western ideas of organisation and external civilisation are penetrating and pouring into our country, whether we will have them or not, so Indian spirituality and philosophy are deluging the lands of the West. None can resist it ; no more can we resist some sort of material civilisation by the West. A little, perhaps, is good for us ; a little spiritualisation is good for the West ; the balance will then be preserved. It is not that we ought to learn everything from the West, or that they have to learn every thing from us, but each will have to supply what it has for future generations, for the future accomplishment of that dream of ages the harmony of nations, an ideal world. Whether that ideal world will ever come or not I do not know, whether that social perfection will ever be reached I have my own doubts ; but, whether it comes or not, each one of us will have to work for the idea as if it will come to-morrow, and that it only depends on my, and my work alone. Each one of us will have to believe that every one else in the world has done his work, and the only one remaining is himself, and if that one does his work the world becomes perfect. This is the responsibility we have to take upon ourselves. In the meanwhile in India there is a tremendous revival of religion. There is a danger ahead, as well glory, for, revival sometimes breeds fanaticism, sometimes goes to the extreme, so that many times it is not even in the power of those who rouse the revival to control it when it has gone to a certain length. It is better, therefore, to be forewarned. We have to find our way between, on the one hand the Scylla of old superstitious orthodoxy, and on the other the Charybdis of materialism, of Europeanism, of soullessness, of so-called reform which really has penetrated to the foundation of Western progress. These two have to be taken care of. In the first place we cannot become the Westerns, therefore imitating the Westerns is useless. Suppose you can imitate the Westerns, that moment you will die, you will have no more life. In the second place it is impossible. A stream is taking its rise away, away beyond where time began, flowing through millions of miles of human history ; do you mean to get hold of that stream, and push it back to its source, to a Himalayan glacier? Even if that be possible it would not be possible for you to be Europeanised. If you find it is impossible for the European to throw off the few centuries of culture which there is in the West, do you think it is possible for you to throw off the culture of shining scores of centuries? It cannot be. Secondly, we must also remember that in every little village-god, and every little superstitious custom is, that which we are accustomed to call our religion. We must study and find out the fountainhead of our religious faith. Local customs are infinite and contradictory ; which to obey, and which not to obey? The Brâhmin in Southern India, for instance, would shrink in horror at the sight of another Brâhmin eating a bit of meat; a Brâhmin in the North thinks it a most glorious and holy thing to do—he kills goats by the hundred in sacrifice. If you are ready with your custom, they are with theirs. Various are the customs all over India, but these are local. The greatest mistake is that ignorant people always think that this local custom is the essence of our religion.

But beyond this there is a still greater difficulty. There are two sorts of truths we find in our Sâstras, one that is based upon the eternal nature of man—the one that deals with the eternal relation of God and soul, and nature ; the other with local circumstances, environments of the time, social institutions of the period, and so forth. The first class of truths is chiefly embodied in our Vedas, our scriptures ; the second in the Smritis, the Purânas, etc. We must remember that for all periods the Vedas are the final goal and authority, and if the Purânas differ in any respect from the Vedas that part of the Purânas is to be rejected without mercy. Well then, what do we find, that in these Smritis all the teachings are different. One Smriti says this is the custom, and this should be the practice of this age. The next comes and says this is the practice of this age, and so forth. This is the âchâra which should be the custom of the Satya Yuga, and this is the âchâra which should be the custom of the Kali Yuga, and so forth. Now this is one of the most glorious doctrines that you have, that eternal truths, being based upon the nature of man, will never change as long as man lives, throughout all times, universal, omnipresent virtues. But the Smritis speak generally of local circumstances, of duties arising from different environments, and they change with the course of time. This you have always to remember, not because a little social custom is going to be changed that you are going to lose your religion, not at all. Remember these customs have already been changed. There was a time in this very India when, without eating beef, no Brâhmin could remain a Brâhmin ; you read in Vedas how, when a great Sanyâsin, or king, or a great man, came into the house they kill the goat and the bullock, how it was found in time that we were an agricultural race, and killing the best bulls meant annihilation of the race. Therefore it was stopped, and the voice was raised against the killing of cows. Sometimes we find that what we now consider the most horrible customs existed. Then in course of time other laws had to be made. These in turn will have to go, and other Smritis will come. This is one fact we have to learn, that the Vedas will be one and the same throughout, but Smritis will have an end. As time rolls on, more and more of the Smritis will go, Sages will come, and they will change and direct society into better channels, into duties and into paths which are the necessity of the age, without which it is impossible that society can live. Thus we have to guide our course, avoiding these two dangers, and I hope that every one of us here will have breadth enough, and at the same time faith enough, to understand what that means, that what I propose is inclusion of everything, and not exclusion. I want the intensity of the fanatic plus the extensivity of the materialist. Broad as the ocean, deep as the infinite skies, that sort of heart we want. Let us be as progressive as any nation that ever existed, and at the same time as faithful and conservative towards our traditions as Hindus alone know how to be. In plain words, we have first to learn the distinction between the essentials and the non-essentials in everything. The essentials are eternal, the non-essentials have value only for a certain time, and if after a time they are not replaced by something else they are positively dangerous. I do not mean that you should stand up and revile all your old customs and institutions. Certainly not; you must not revile even the most evil one of them. Revile none; even those customs that are now appearing to be positive evils have been positively life-giving in times past, and if we have to remove these, we must not do so with curses, but with blessings and gratitude for the glorious work these customs have done for the preservation of our race. And we must also remember that the leaders of our societies have never been either generals or kings, but Rishis, and who are the Rishis? The Rishi is a man who sees religion, to whom religion is not merely book learning, not argumentation, nor speculation, nor much talking, but actual realisation, coming face to face with truths which transcend the senses, as he is called in the Upanishads, not as ordinary man, but Mantra drashta, and this is Rishihood, and that Rishihood does not belong to any age, or time, or even to sects or caste. Vātsyāyana says truth must be realised—and we have to remember that you, and I, and everyone of us will be called upon to become Rishis, and we must get faith in ourselves, we must be world movers for everything is in us. We must see Religion face to face, experience it, and thus solve our doubts about it, and then standing up in the glorious light of Rishihood each one of us will be a giant and every word falling from our lips will carry behind it that infinite sanction of security, and before us evil will vanish by itself, without the necessity of cursing anyone, without the necessity of abusing any one, without the necessity of fighting anyone in the world. May the Lord help us, each one of us here, to realise the Rishihood for our own, and for the salvation of others.

While in Madura the Swami paid a visit to the Temple, which is regarded as one of the finest in India, and is remarkable for its wealth of architectural detail, and in the evening took train for Kumbhakonam by the South Indian Railway. At every station at which the train stopped crowds of people were in waiting, and at Trichinopoly in particular at 4 o'clock in the morning there were over a thousand people on the platform, who presented the following address :—

TO SWAMI VIVEKANANDA PARAMAHAMSA.

VENERABLE SWAMI :—

We the citizens of Trichinopoly offer you our sincerest respects. Great were our hopes of having thy worthy self, India's invaluable gem, amongst us for a day, and our only consolation is that what is our loss is Madras's gain.

Children of God, religiously great are the greatest of all human beings, and we need hardly say how thankful we are that our Heavenly Father has seen fit to bless us with your noble self.

There is no doubt at all that mother India will amply reward you for the fair fame and name you have earned for her. The praises of Hindu Theology are heard in every nook and corner of the mighty British Empire.

May the Almighty Father reward you for all your labours, and may this flame of enthusiasm you have kindled in ourselves and in the glorious American nation burn for ever and eternally.

We beg to remain, Venerable

Trichinopoly, }
2nd February, 1897. }

Swami's most obedient Servants.

Addresses were also presented from the Council of the National High School, Trichinopoly, and the student population of Trichinopoly.

The reply was necessarily brief. There was a similarly large demonstration at Tanjore at four o'clock the same morning.

This visit to Kumbhakonam was taken advantage of to rest for three days, during which time the Swami was presented with two addresses. The first of these was to the following effect :—

REVERED SWAMIN,—

On behalf of the Hindu inhabitants of this ancient and religiously important town of Kumbhakonam we request permission to offer you a most hearty welcome on your return from the Western World to our own holy land of great temples and famous saints and sages. We are highly thankful to God for the remarkable success of your religious mission in America and in Europe, and for His having enabled you to impress upon the choicest representatives of the world's great religions assembled at Chicago that both Hindu Philosophy and Religion are so broad and so rationally catholic as to have in them the power to exalt and to harmonise all ideals of God and of human spirituality.

The conviction that the cause of Truth is always safe in the hands of Him who is the life and soul of the universe has been for thousands of years part of our living faith; and if to-day we rejoice at the results of your holy work in Christian lands, it is because the eyes of men in and outside India are thereby being opened to the inestimable value of the spiritual heritage of the pre-eminently religious Hindu nation. The success of your work has naturally added great lustre to the already renowned name of your great Guru; it has also raised us in the estimation of the civilised world; more than all, it has made us feel that we too, as a people, have reasons to be proud of the achievements of our past, and that the absence of telling aggressiveness in our civilisation is in no way a sign of its exhausted or decaying condition. With clear sighted, devoted, and altogether unselfish workers like you in our midst, the future of the Hindu nation cannot but be bright and hopeful. May the God in the universe who is also the great God of all nations bestow on you health and long life, and make you increasingly strong and wise in the discharge of your high and noble function as a worthy teacher of Hindu Religion and Philosophy.

The Second address was from the Hindu students of the town.

The Swami delivered a very able address on Vedantism, of which a report follows:—

“A very small amount of religious work performed brings a very large amount of result”—are the eternal words of the author of the Gita, and if that statement wanted an illustration, in my humble life I am finding everyday the truth of that great saying. My work, gentlemen of Kumbhakonam, has been very insignificant indeed, but the kindness and the cordiality of welcome that have met me at every step of my journey from Colombo to this city are simply beyond all expectation. Yet, at the same time, it is worthy of our traditions as Hindus, it is worthy of our race; for here we are the Hindu race, whose vitality, whose life-principle, whose very soul, as it were, is in religion. I have seen a little of the world, travelling among the races of the West and the East; and everywhere I find among nations one great ideal, which forms the backbone, so to speak, of that race. With some it is politics, with others it is social culture; others again have intellectual culture and so on for their national background. But this, our mother-land, has religion and religion alone for its basis for its backbone, for the bedrock upon which the whole building of its life has been based. Some of you may remember that in my reply to the kind address which the people of Madras sent over to me in America, I pointed out the fact that a peasant in India has, in many respects, a better religious education than many a gentleman in the West, and to-day, beyond all doubt, I myself am verifying my own words. There was a time when I would feel rather discontented at the want of information among the masses of India, and the lack of thirst among them for information, but now I understand it. Where their interest lies they are more eager for information than the masses of any other race that I have seen or have travelled among. Ask our peasants about the momentous political changes in Europe, the upheavals that are going on in European society. They do not know anything of these, nor do they care to know; but those very peasants, even in Ceylon, detached from India in many ways, cut off from a living interest in India—I found the very peasants working in the fields there, had already known that there was a Parliament of Religions in America, and that one of their men had gone over there and that he had had some success. Where, therefore, their interest is, there they are as eager for information as any other race; and religion is the one and the sole interest of the people in India. I am not just now discussing whether it is good to have the vitality of the race in religious ideals or in political ideals, but so far it is clear to us, that for good or for evil our vitality is concentrated in our religion. You cannot change it. You cannot destroy one thing and put in its place another. You cannot transplant a large growing tree from one soil to another and make it immediately take root here. For good or for evil the religious ideal has been flowing into India for thousands of years, for good or evil the Indian atmosphere has been filled with ideals of religion for shining scores of centuries, for good or evil we have been born and brought up in the very midst of these ideals of religion, till it has entered into our very blood, and tingles with every drop of it in our veins, and has become one with our constitution, become the very vitality of our lives. Can you give such religion up without the rousing of the same energy in reaction, without filling the channel which that mighty river has cut out for itself in the course of thousands of years? Do you want that the Ganges should go back to its icy bed and begin a new course? Even if that were possible, it would be impossible for this country to give up her characteristic course of religious life and take up a new career of politics or something else for herself. You can only work under the law of least resistance, and this religious line is the line of least resistance in India. This is the line of life, this is the line of growth, and this is the line of well-being in India—to follow the track of religion. Aye, in other countries religion is only one of the many necessities in life. To use a common illustration which I am in the habit of using, my lady has many things in her parlour, and it is the fashion now a-days to have a Japanese vase, and she must procure it; it does not look well without it. So my lady, or my gentleman, has many other occupations in life; a little bit of religion also must come in to complete it. Consequently she has a little religion. Politics, social improvement, in one word, this world, is the goal of the rest of mankind, and God and religion come in quietly as the helpers out of the world; their God is, so to speak, the being who helps to cleanse and to furnish this world of ours; that is apparently all the value of God for them. Do you not know how for the last hundred or two hundred years you have been hearing again and again out of the lips of men who ought to have known better, from the mouths of those who pretend, at least, to know better, that all the arguments they produce against this Indian religion of ours is this, that our religion does not conduce to well-being in this world, that does not bring to us handfuls of gold, that it does not make robbers of nations, that it does not make the strong stand upon the bodies of the weak, and feed themselves with the life-blood of the weak. Certainly our religion does not do that. It cannot march cohorts, under whose feet the earth trembles, for the purpose of destruction and pillage and the ruination of races. Therefore they say—what is there in this religion? It does not bring any grist to the grinding mill, any strength to the muscles; what is there in such a religion? They little dream that that is the very argument with which we prove our religion because it does not make for this world. Ours is the only true religion because this little sense-world of three days duration is not to be according to it, the end and aim of all, is not to be our great goal. This little earthly horizon of a few feet is not that which bounds the view of our religion. Ours is away beyond, and still beyond ; beyond the senses, beyond space, and beyond time, away, away beyond, till nothing of this world is left there and the universe itself beomes like one drop in the transcendent ocean of the glory of the soul. Ours is the true religion because it teaches that God alone is true, and that this world is false and fleeting, and that all your gold is dust, and that all your power is finite, and that life itself is often times an evil ; therefore it is that ours is the true religion. Ours is the true religion, because, above all, it teaches renunciation, and stands up with the wisdom of ages to tell and to declare to the nations who are mere children of yesterday in comparison with the hoary antiquity of the wisdom that our ancestors have discovered for us here in India—to tell them in plain words, “Children, you are slaves of the senses; there is only finiteness in the senses there is only ruination in the senses ; the three short days of luxury here bring only ruin at last. Give it all up, renounce the love of the senses and of the world ; that is the way of religion.” Through renunciation is the way to the goal and not through enjoyment. Therefore, ours is the only true religion. Aye, it is a curious fact that, while nations after nations have come upon the stage of the world, played their parts vigorously for a few moments, and died almost without leaving a mark or a ripple on the ocean of time, here we are, living, as it were an eternal life. They talk a great deal of the new theories about the survival of the fittest, and they think that it is the strength of the muscles which is the fittest to survive. If that were true, any one of the aggressively known old-world nations would have lived in glory to-day, and we, the weak Hindus—an English young lady once told me, what have the Hindus done? they never even conquered one single race!—even this race, which never conquered even one other race or nation, lives here three hundred million strong. And it is not at all true that all its energies are spent, that atavism has seized upon every bit of its body; that is not true. There is vitality enough, and it comes out in torrents and deluges when the time is ripe and requires it. We have, as it were, thrown a challenge to the whole world from the most ancient times. In the West they are trying to solve the problem how much a man can possess, and we are trying here to solve the problem on how little a man can live. This struggle and this difference has to go on still for some centuries. But if history has any truth in it, and if prognostications ever prove true, it must be that those who train themselves to live on the least supply of things and to control themselves well will in the end gain the battle, and that all those who run after enjoyment and luxury, however vigorous they may seem for the moment, will have to die and become annihilated. There are times in the history of a man's life, nay in the history of the lives of nations, when a sort of world-weariness becomes painfully predominant. It seems that such a tide of world-weariness has come upon the Western World. There too they have their thinkers, great men; and they are already finding out that it is all vanity of vanities, this race after gold and power; many, nay most, cultured men and women there are already weary of this competition, this struggle, this brutality of their commercial civilisation, and they are looking forward towards something better. There is a class which still clings on to political and social changes as the only panacea for the evils in Europe, but among the great thinkers there other ideals are growing. They have found out that no amount of political or social manipulation of human conditions can cure the evils of life. It is a change of the soul itself for the better that alone will cure the evils of life. No amount of force, or government, or legislative cruelty, will change the conditions of a race, but it is spiritual culture and ethical culture alone that can change wrong racial tendencies for the better. Thus, these races of the West are eager for some new thought, for some new philosophy; the religion they have had, Christianity, although imperfectly understood and good and glorious in many respects, is as understood hitherto found to be insufficient. The thoughtful men of the West find in our ancient philosophy, especially in the Vedānta, the new impulse of thought they are seeking, the very spiritual food and drink they are hungering and thirsting for. And it is no wonder.

I have become used to hear all sorts of wonderful claims put forward in favour of every religion under the sun. You have also heard, quite within recent times, claims put forward in favour of Christianity by a great friend of mine, Dr. Barrows, that Christianity is the only universal religion. Let me consider this question awhile and lay before you my reasons why I think that it is the Vedānta, and the Vedānta alone that can become the universal religion of man, and that none else is fitted for that role. Excepting our own, almost all the other great religions in the world are inevitably connected with the life or lives of one or more founders. All their theories, their teachings, their doctrines, and their ethics are built round the life of a personal founder from whom they get their sanction, their authority, and their power; and strangely enough upon the historicity of the founder's life is built, as it were, all the fabric of such religions. If there is one blow dealt to the historicity of that life as has been the case in modern times with the lives of almost all the so-called founders of religion—we know that half of the details of such lives is not now seriously believed in and that the other half is seriously doubted—if this becomes the case, if that rock of historicity, as they pretend to call it, is shaken and shivered, the whole building tumbles down broken absolutely, never to regain its lost status. Everyone of the great religions in the world excepting our own, is built upon such historical characters ; but ours rest upon principles. There is no man or woman who can claim to have created the Vedas. They are the embodiment of eternal principles ; sages discovered them ; and now and then the names of these sages are mentioned, just their names ; we do not even know who or what they were. In many cases we do not know who their fathers were, and almost in every case we do not know when and where they were born. But what cared they, these sages, for their names? They were the preachers of principles, and they themselves, as far as they went, tried to become illustrations of the principles they preached. At the same time, just as our God is an impersonal and yet a personal God, so is our religion a most intensely impersonal one, a religion based upon principles, and yet it has an infinite scope for the play of persons ; for what religion gives you more incarnations, more prophets and seers, and still waits for infinitely more? Says the Bhagavad-Gitá that Incarnations are infinite, leaving ample scope for as many as you like to come. Therefore if any one or more of these persons in India's religious history, anyone or more of these Incarnations, and any one or more of our prophets, are proved not to have been historical, it does not injure our religion a bit ; even then it remains there firm as ever, because it is based upon principles, and not on persons. It is vain to try to gather all the peoples of the world around a single personality. It is difficult to make them gather together even round eternal and universal principles. If it ever becomes possible to bring the largest portion of humanity to one way of thinking in regard to religion, mark you, it must be always through principles and not through persons. Yet, as I have said, our religion has ample scope for the authority and influence of persons. There is that most wonderful theory of Ishta, which gives you the fullest and the freest choice possible among these great religious personalities. You may take up any one of the prophets or teachers as your guide and the object of your special adoration ; you are even allowed to think that he whom you have chosen is the greatest of the prophets, greatest of all the Avatàras ; there is no harm in that, but you must keep on a firm background of eternally true principles. The strange fact is here, that the power of our Incarnations has been holding good with us only so far as they are illustrations of the principles in the Vedas. The glory of Srî Krishna is that he has been the best preacher of our eternal religion of principles and the best commentator on the Vedânta that ever lived in India.

The second claim of the Vedânta upon the attention of the world is that, of all the scriptures in the world, it is the one scripture the teaching of which is in entire harmony with the results that have been attained by the modern scientific investigations of external nature. Two minds in the dim past of history, cognate to each other in form and kinship, and sympathy, started, being placed in different circumstances, for the same goal through different routes. The one was the ancient Hindu mind and the other the ancient Greek mind. The latter started in search of that goal beyond by analysing the external world. The former started by analysing the internal world. And even through the various vicissitudes of their history it is easy to make out these two vibrations of thoughts tending to produce similar echoes from the goal beyond. It seems clear that the conclusions of modern materialistic science can be acceptable, harmoniously with their religion, only to the Vedântins, or Hindus as they call them. It seems clear that modern materialism can hold its own and at the same time approach spirituality by taking up the conclusions of the Vedânta. It seems to us, and to all who care to know, that the conclusions of modern science are the very conclusions the Vedânta reached ages ago; only in modern science they are written in the language of matter. This, then, is another claim of the Vedânta upon modern Western minds, its rationality, the wonderful rationalism of the Vedânta. I have myself been told by some of the best scientific minds of the day in the West how wonderfully rational the conclusions of the Vedânta are. I know one of them personally who scarcely has time to eat his meals, or go out of his laboratory, and who yet would stand by the hour to attend my lectures on the Vedânta; for, as he expresses it, they are so scientific, they so exactly harmonise with the aspirations of the age and with the conclusions which modern science is coming to at the present time. Two such scientific conclusions drawn from Comparative Religion, I would specially like to draw your attention to; the one bears upon the idea of the universality of religions, and the other on the idea of the oneness of things. We observe in the histories of Babylon and among the Jews an interesting religious phenomenon happening. We find that each of these Babylonian and Jewish peoples weredivided into so many tribes, each tribe having a god of its own, and that these little tribal Gods had often a generic name. The gods among the Babylonians were all called Baals, and among them Baal Merodac was the chief. In course of time one of these many tribes would conquer and assimilate the other racially allied tribes, and the natural result would be that the God of the conquering tribe would be placed at the head of all the gods of the other tribes. Thus the so-called boasted monotheism of the Semites was created. Among the Jews the gods went by the name of Moloch. Of these there was one Moloch which belonged to the tribe called Israel, and he was called the Moloch Yahva, or Moloch Yava. Then this tribe of Israel slowly conquered some of the other tribes of the same race, destroyed their Molochs, and declared its own Moloch to be the Supreme Moloch of all the Molochs. And I am sure most of you know the amount of bloodshed, of tyranny, and of brutal savagery that this religious conquest entailed. Later on the Babylonians tried to destroy this supremacy of Moloch Yahva, but could not succeed. It seems to me that such an attempt at tribal self-assertion in religious matters might have taken place on the frontiers of India also. Here too all the various tribes of the Aryans might have come into conflict with one another for declaring the supremacy of their several tribal gods; but India's history was to be otherwise, was to be different from that of the Jews. India was to be alone the land, of all lands of toleration and of spirituality, and therefore the fight between tribes and their gods did not take place long here, for one of the greatest sages that was ever born anywhere found out here in India even at that distant time, which history cannot reach—tradition itself dares not to peep into the gloom of that past when the sage arose—and declared, "He who exists is one; the sages call Him variously"—Ekam sat viprā bahudhā vadanti; one of the most memorable sentences that was ever uttered, one of the grandest of truths that was ever discovered ; and for us Hindus this truth has been the very backbone of our national existence. For throughout the vistas of the centuries of our national life this one idea Ekam sat viprā bahudhā Vadanti, comes down, gaining in volume and in fulness till it has permeated the whole of our national existence, till it is mingled in our blood, and has become one with us in every grain. We love that grand truth in every grain and our country has become the glorious land of religious toleration. It is here and here alone that they build temples and churches for the religions which have come in with the object of condemning our own religion. This is one very great principle that the world is waiting to learn from us. Aye, you little know how much of intolerance is yet abroad. It struck me more than once that I would have to leave my bones on foreign shores owing to the prevalence of religious intolerance. Killing a man is nothing for religion's sake ; to-morrow they may do it in the very heart of the boasted civilisation of the West, if to-day they are not really doing so. Outcasting in its most horrible forms would often come down upon the head of a man in the West, if he dared to say a word against his country's accepted religion. They talk glibly and smoothly here in criticism of our caste laws. If you go to the West and live there as I have done, you will know that even the biggest professors you hear of are arrant cowards and dare not to tell, for fear of public opinion, a hundredth part of what they hold to be really true in religious matters.

Therefore the world is waiting for this grand idea of universal toleration. It will be a great acquisition to civilisation. Nay, no civilisation can exist long unless this idea enters it. No civilisation can go on growing before fanaticism stops and bloodshed stops and brutality stops. No civilisation can begin to lift up its head until we look charitably upon each other, and the first step towards that much needed charity is to look charitably and kindly upon the religious convictions of each other. Nay more, to understand that, not only should we be charitable towards each other, but positively helpful to each other, however different our religious ideas and convictions may be. And that is exactly what we in India do, as I have just related to you. It is here in India that Hindus have built and are still building churches for Christians, and mosques for Mahomedans. That is the thing to do. In spite of their hatred, in spite of their brutality, in spite of their cruelty, in spite of their tyranny, and in spite of the filthy language they are always given to uttering, we will and must go on building churches for the Christians and mosques for the Mahomedans till we conquer through love, till we have demonstrated to the world that love alone is the fittest thing to survive and not hatred, that it is gentleness that has the strength to live on and to fructify but not mere brutality and physical force.

The other great idea that the world wants from us to-day, the thinking part of Europe and the whole world—more, perhaps, the lower classes than the higher, more the masses than the cultured, more the ignorant the educated, more the weak than the strong—is that eternal grand idea of the spiritual oneness of the whole universe. I need not tell you to-day, men from this Madras University, how the modern researches of Europe have demonstrated through physical means the oneness and the solidarity of the whole universe, how, physically speaking, you and I, the sun and the moon and the stars, are but little waves or wavelets in the midst of an infinite ocean of matter, and how Indian psychology had demonstrated ages ago that, similarly, both body and mind are but mere names or little wavelets in the ocean of matter, the Samashiti, and how, going one step further, it is shown in the Vedānta that, behind that idea of the unity of the whole show, the real soul is also one. There is but one soul throughout the universe, all is but one existence. This great idea of the real and basic solidarity of the whole universe has frightened many, even in this country ; it even now finds sometimes more opponents than adherents ; I tell you, nevertheless, that it is the one great life-giving idea which the world wants from us to-day and which the mute masses of India want for their uplifting, for none can regenerate this land of ours without the practical application and effective operation of this ideal of the oneness of things. The rational West is earnestly bent upon seeking out the rationality, the raison d'être of all its philosophy and its ethics ; and you all know well that ethics cannot be derived from the mere sanction of any personage, however great and divine he may have been, of one who having been born but yesterday has had to die a few minutes after. Such an explanation of the authority of ethics no more appeals to the highest of the world's thinkers ; they want something more than human sanction for ethical and moral codes to be binding, they want some eternal principle of truth as the sanction of ethics. And where is that eternal sanction to be found except in the only infinite reality that exists, in you and in me and in all, in the self, in the soul ? The infinite oneness of the soul is the eternal sanction of all morality, that you and I are not only brothers—even literature voicing man's struggle towards freedom, children have preached that for you—but that you and I are really one. This is the dictate of Indian philosophy. This oneness is the rationale of all ethics and all spirituality, Europe wants it to-day just as much as our down trodden masses do, and this great principle is even now unconsciously forming the basis of all the latest political and social aspirations that are coming up in England, in Germany, in France, and in America. And mark it, my friends, that in and through all the literature voicing man's struggle towards freedom, towards universal freedom, again and again you find the Indian Vedantic ideals coming out prominently. In some cases the writers do not know the source of their inspiration, in some cases they try to appear very original, and a few there are bold and grateful enough to mention the source and acknowledge their indebtedness to it. My friends, when I was in America, I heard it once complained that I was preaching too much of Advaita, and too little of dualism. Aye, I know what grandeur, what oceans of love, what infinite, ecstatic blessings and joy there are in the dualistic love-theories of worship and religion. I know it all. But this is not the time with us to weep even in joy; we have had weeping enough; no more is this the time for us to become soft. This softness has been on us till we are dead; we have become like masses of cotton. What our country now wants are muscles of iron and nerves of steel, gigantic wills which nothing can resist, which can penetrate into the mysteries and the secrets of the universe, and will accomplish their purpose even if it meant going down to the bottom of the ocean and meeting death face to face in every fashion. That is what we want, and that can only be created, established and strengthened, by understanding and realising the ideal of the Advaita, that ideal of the oneness of all. Faith, faith, faith in ourselves, faith, faith in God, this is the secret of greatness. If you have faith in all the three hundred and thirty millions of your mythological gods and in all the gods which foreigner's have now and again sent into your midst, and still have no faith in yourselves, there is no salvation for you. Have faith in yourselves, and stand up on that faith and be strong ; that is what we need. Why is it that we three hundred and thirty millions of people have been ruled for the last one thousand years by any and every handful of foreigners who chose to walk over our prostrate bodies? Because they had faith in themselves and we had not. What did I learn in the West, and what did I see behind those talks of frothy nonsense of the Christian religious sects saying that man was a fallen and hopelessly fallen sinner? There inside the national hearts of both Europe and America resides the tremendous power of the men's faith in themselves. An English boy will tell you—"I am an Englishman, and I will do anything." The American boy will tell you the same, and so will every European boy. Can our boys say the same thing here? No, nor even the boys' fathers. We have lost faith in ourselves. Therefore to preach the Advaita aspect of the Vedānta is necessary to rouse up the hearts of men, to show them the glory of their souls. It is therefore that I preach this Advaita, and I do so not as a sectarian but upon universal and widely acceptable grounds.

It is easy to find out the way of reconciliation that will not hurt the dualist or the qualified monist. There is not one system in India which does not hold the doctrine that God is within, that divinity resides within all things. Every one of our Vedāntic systems admits that all purity and perfection and strength are in the soul already. According to some this perfection sometimes becomes, as it were, contracted, and at other times it becomes expanded again. Yet it is there. According to the Advaita it neither contracts nor expands, but becomes hidden and uncovered now and again. Pretty much the same thing in effect. The one may be a more logical statement than the other, but as to the result, the practical conclusions, both are about the same; and this is the one central idea which the world stands in need of, and nowhere is the want more felt than in this, our own mother-land. Aye, my friends, I must tell you a few harsh words. I read in the newspapers, when one of our poor fellows is murdered or illtreated by an Englishman, how the howls go all over the country; I read and I weep, and the next moment comes to my mind the question who is responsible for it all. As a Vedantist I cannot but put that question to myself. The Hindu is a man of introspection, he wants to see things in and through himself, through the subjective vision. I therefore ask myself who is responsible, and the answer comes every time, not the English, no, they are not responsible, it is we who are responsible for all our misery and all our degradation, and we alone are responsible. Our aristocratic ancestors went on treading the common masses of our country under foot, till they became helpless, till under this torment the poor, poor people nearly forgot that they were human beings. They have been compelled to be merely hewers of wood and drawers of water for centuries, so much so that they are made to believe that they are born as slaves, born as hewers of wood and drawers of water. And if anybody says a kind word for them, with all our boasted education of modern times, I often find our men shrink at once from the duty of lifting up the down-trodden. Not only so, but I also find that all sorts of most demoniacal and brutal arguments, culled from the crude ideas of hereditary transmission and other such gibberish from the Western world, are brought forward in order to brutalise and tyrannise over the poor all the more. In the Parliament of Religions in America there came among others a young man, a Negro born, a real African Negro, and he made a beautiful speech

I became interested in the young man, and now and then talked to him, but could learn nothing about him. But one day in England I met some Americans, and this is what they told me—that this boy was the son of a Negro chief in the heart of Africa, and that one day another chief became angry with the father of this boy and murdered him and murdered the mother also to be cooked and eaten, and that he ordered the child also to be cooked and eaten ; but that the boy fled and after passing through great hardships travelling through a distance of several hundreds of miles, he reached the sea-shore, and that there he was taken into an American vessel and brought over to America. And this boy made that speech ! After that what was I to think of your doctrine of heredity ! Aye, Brahmins, if the Brahmin has more aptitude for learning on the ground of heredity than the Pariah, spend no more money on the Brahmin's education, but spend all on the Pariah. Give to the weak, for there all the gift is needed. If the Brahmin is born clever he can educate himself without help. If the others are not born clever, let them have all the teaching and the teachers they want. This is justice and reason as I understand. These our poor people, therefore require to hear and to know what they really are, these downtrodden masses of India. Yea, let every man and woman and child, without respect of caste or birth or weakness or strength, hear and know that behind the strong and the weak behind the high and the low, behind every one, there is that Infinite, Soul assuring the infinite possibility and the infinite capacity of all to become great and good. Let us proclaim to every soul—Uttishtata Jāgrata, prāpya varān nibodhata—“ Arise, awake and stop not till the goal is reached.” Arise, awake ; awake from this hypnotism of weakness. None is really weak ; the soul is infinite, omnipotent, and omniscient. Stand up, assert yourself, proclaim the God within you, do not deny. Too much of inactivity, too much of weakness, too much of hypnotism, has been and is upon our race. O ye modern Hindus, dehypnotise yourselves. The way to do that is found in your own sacred books. Teach yourselves, teach every one his real nature, call upon the sleeping soul to see how it rises. Power will come, glory will come, goodness will come, purity will come, and everything that is excellent will come when this sleeping soul is roused to self-conscious activity. Aye, if there is anything in the Gītā that I like, it is these two verses, coming out strong as the very gist, the very essence, of Krishna's teaching—"He who sees the Supreme Lord dwelling alike in all beings, the Imperishable in things that perish, sees indeed. For seeing the Lord as the same, everywhere present, he does not destroy the self by the self, and then he goes to the highest goal."

Thus there is a great opening for the Vedānta to do beneficent work both here and elsewhere. This wonderful idea of the sameness and omnipresence of the Supreme Soul has to be preached for the amelioration and elevation of the human race, here as elsewhere. Wherever there is evil and wherever there is ignorance and want of knowledge, I have found out in my experience that as, our scriptures say, all evil comes by relying upon differences, and that all good comes from faith in equality, in the underlying sameness and real oneness of things. This is the great Vedāntic ideal. To have the ideal is one thing, and to apply it practically to the details of daily life is quite another thing in every case. It is very good to point out an ideal, but where is the practical way to reach it? Here naturally comes the difficult question which has been uppermost for centuries in the minds of our people, the vexed question of caste and of social reformation. I must frankly let this audience know that I am neither a caste-breaker nor a mere social reformer. I have nothing to do directly with your castes or with your social reformation. Live in any caste you like, but that is no reason why you should hate another caste or another man. It is love and love alone that I preach, and I base my teaching on the great Vedantic truth of the sameness and omnipresence of the Soul of the Universe. For the last one hundred years nearly, our country has been flooded with social reformers and various social reform proposals. Personally I have no fault to find with these reformers. Most of them are good well-meaning men, and their aims too are very laudable on certain points; but it is quite a patent fact that this one hundred years of social reform has produced no permanent and valuable result appreciable throughout the country. Platform speeches have been sent out by the thousand, denunciations have been hurled upon the devoted head of the Hindu race and its civilisation in volumes after volumes and yet no good practical result has been achieved; and where is the reason for that? The reason is not hard to find. It is in the denunciation itself. In the first place, as I told you before, we must try to keep our historically acquired character as a people; I grant that we have to take great many things from other nations, that we have to learn many lessons from outside; but I am sorry to say that most of our modern reform-movements have been inconsiderate imitations of Western means and methods of work, and that surely will not do for India; therefore it is that all our recent reform-movements have had no result. In the second place, denunciation is not at all the way to do good. That there are evils in our society even the child can see, and what society is there where there are no evils? And let me take this opportunity, my countrymen, of telling you that, in comparing the different races and nations of the world I have been among, I have come to the conclusion that our people are on the whole the most moral and the most highly godly and our institutions are, in their plan and purpose, best suited to make mankind happy. I do not therefore want any reformation. My ideal is growth, expansion, development on national lines. As I look back upon the history of my country I do not find in the whole world another country which has done quite so much for the improvement of the human mind. Therefore I have no words of condemnation for my nation. I tell them "You have done well ; only try to do better." Great things have been done in the past in this land ; there is both time and room for greater things to be done. I am sure you know that we cannot stop. If we stop we die. We have either to go forward or to go backward. We have either to progress or to degenerate. Our ancestors did great things in the past but we have to grow into fuller life and march on even beyond their great achievements. How can we now go back and degenerate ourselves ? That cannot be ; that must not be ; going back will lead us to national decay and death. Therefore, let us go forward and do yet greater things ; that is what I have to tell you. I am no preacher of any momentary social reform. I am not trying to remedy evils, I only ask you to go forward and to complete the practical realisation of the scheme of human progress that has been laid out in the most perfect order by our ancestors. I only ask you to work to realise more and more the Vedantic ideal of the solidarity of man and his inborn divine nature. Had I the time I would gladly show you how every bit of what we have now to do was laid out years ago by our ancient law-givers, and how they actually anticipated all the different changes that have taken place and are still to take place in our national institutions. They also were breakers of caste, but they were not like our modern men. They did not mean by the breaking of caste that all the people in a city should sit down together to a dinner of a beefsteak and champagne, nor that all fools and lunatics in the country should marry when, where and whom they chose, and reduce the country to a lunatic asylum, nor did they believe that the prosperity of a nation is to be gauged by the number of husbands its widows get. I am yet to see such a prosperous nation. The ideal man of our ancestors was the Brahmin. In all our books stands out prominently this ideal of the Brahmin. In Europe there is my Lord the Cardinal who is struggling hard and spending thousands of pounds to prove the nobility of his ancestors, and he will not be satisfied until he has traced his ancestry to some dreadful tyrant, who lived on a hill, and watched the people passing through the streets, and whenever he had the opportunity sprang out on them and robbed them. That was the business of these nobility-bestowing ancestors, and my Lord Cardinal is not satisfied until he can trace his ancestry to one of these. In India, on the other hand, the greatest princes seek to trace their descent to some ancient sage, dressed in a bit of loin-cloth, living in a forest, eating roots, and studying the Vedas. It is there that the Indian prince goes to trace his ancestry. You are High caste when you can trace your ancestry to a Rishi, and not before that. Our ideal of high birth, therefore, is different from that of others. Our ideal is the Brahmin of spiritual culture and renunciation. By the Brahmin ideal what do I mean? The ideal Brahminness in which worldliness is altogether absent and true wisdom is abundantly present. That is the ideal of the Hindu race. Have you not heard how it is declared that he, the Brahmin, is not amenable to law, that he has no law, that he is not governed by kings, and that his body cannot be hurt ? That is perfectly true. Do not understand it in the light which has been thrown upon it by interested and ignorant fools, but understand it in the light of the true and original Vedàntic conception. If the Brahmin is he who has killed all selfishness and who lives and works to acquire and to propagate wisdom and the power of love, a country that is inhibited by such Brahmins altogether by men and women who are spiritual and moral and good, is it strange to think of that country as being above and beyond all law ? What police, what military are necessary to govern them ? Why should any one govern them at all ? Why should any one govern them at all ? Why should they live under a government ? They are good and noble, they are the men of God, these are our ideal Brahmins, and we read that in the Satya-Yuga there was only one caste to start with, and that was that of the Brahmin. We read in the Mahábhárata that the whole world was in the beginning peopled with Brahmins, and that as they began to degenerate they became divided into different castes, and that when the cycle turns round they will all go back to that Brahminical origin. This cycle is now turning round, and I draw your attention to this fact. Therefore our solution of the caste question is not degrading those who are already high up, is not running amuck through food and drink, is not jumping out of our own limits in order to have more enjoyment ; but it comes by every one of us fulfilling the dictates of our Vedàntic religion, by our attaining spirituality and by our becoming the ideal Brahmin. There is a law laid on each one of you here in this land by your ancestors, whether you are Aryans, or non-Aryans, Rishis, or Brahmins, or the very lowest out-castes. The command is the same to you all, and that you must not stop at all without making progress and that, from the highest man to the lowest Pariah, every one in this country has to try and become the ideal Brahmin. This Vedantic idea is applicable not only here but over the whole world, Such is our ideal of caste, meant for raising all humanity slowly and gently towards the realisation of that great ideal of the spiritual man who is non-resisting, calm, steady, worshipful, pure, and meditative. In that ideal there is God,

How are these things to be brought about? I must again draw your attention to the fact that cursing and vilifying and abusing do not and cannot produce anything good. They have been tried for years and years, and no valuable result has been obtained. Good results can be produced only through love, through sympathy. It is a great subject, and it requires several lectures to elucidate all the plans that I have in view, and all the ideas that are, in this connection, coming to my mind day after day. I must therefore conclude, only reminding you of this fact, that this ship of our nation, O Hindus, has been usefully plying here for ages. To-day, perhaps, it has sprung a few leaks; to-day, perhaps, it has become a little worn; and if such is the case, it behoves you and I, children of the soil, to try our best to stop these leaks and holes. Let us tell our countrymen of the danger, let them awake, let them mend it. I will cry at the top of my voice from one part to the other of this country to awaken the people to know their situation and their duty therein. Suppose they do not hear me, still I shall not have one word of abuse for them, not one word of curse. Great has been our nation's work in the past, and if we cannot do greater things in the future, let us have this consolation, let us all die and sink together in peace. Be patriots, love the race which has done such great things for us in the past. Aye, the more I compare notes the more I love you, my fellow countrymen; you are good and pure and gentle; and you have been always tyrannised over; such is the irony of this material world of Mâyâ. Never mind that; the spirit will triumph in the long run. In the meanwhile let us work and let us not abuse our country, let us not curse and abuse the weather-beaten and work-worn institutions of our thrice holy mother-land. Have not one word of condemnation, even for the most superstitious and the most irrational of its institutions, for they also must have served to do us good in the past. Remember always that there is not in the world one other country whose institutions are really better in their aims and objects than the institutions of this land. I have seen castes in almost every country in the world, but nowhere is their plan and purpose so glorious as here. If caste is thus unavoidable, I would rather have a caste of purity and culture and self-sacrifice than a caste of dollar. Therefore utter no words of condemnation. Close your lips and let your hearts open. Work out the salvation of this land and of the whole world, each of you thinking that the entire burden is on your shoulders. Carry the light and the life of the Vedânta to every door and rouse up the divinity that is hidden within every soul. Then, whatever may be the measure of your success, you shall have this satisfaction, that you have lived, worked and died for a great cause. In the success of this cause, however brought about, is centred the salvation of humanity here and hereafter.

En route from Kumbhakonam to Madras the experiences of the previous journey from Madura were repeated. The citizens of Mayavaram met him on the station platform and presented him with an address. The platform was crowded. Mr. D. Natesa Aiyar read the following address:—

TO SRIMAT SWAMI VIVEKANANDA.

REVERED SIR,

We, the citizens of Mayavaram, beg leave to approach you to express our humble gratitude and respect for the invaluable services you have rendered to our mother country by expounding the truths of Hinduism in countries abroad. We feel deeply on this occasion to express our sentiments of admiration and regard for you for the great and onerous work in the cause of our religion so uniquely winning renown wherever you went. We are, Sir, fully conscious of the great trouble and self-sacrifice this noble task had caused you. We fervently pray that you may be long spared in health and strength to continue this labor of love you have so nobly undertaken.

The Swami in reply thanked them in fitting terms. He said he has not done anything great, and any body else would be better. Yet he was pleased to see that even his small labor was being gratefully appreciated; he would be glad to visit Mayavaram on another occasion. The train moved off amidst great enthusiasm.

MADRAS.

A huge crowd met the train at Madras, and many thousand people took part in the procession which passed through no less than seventeen triumphal arches. For a part of the distance the horses were removed from the Swami's carriage, and he was drawn by the people to Castle Kernan, where he stayed during his visit.

The address presented by the Madras Reception Committee on the Sunday following read as follows :—

REVERED SWAMIN.—On behalf of your Hindu Co-religionists in Madras, we offer you a most hearty welcome on the occasion of your return from your Religious Mission in the West. Our object in approaching you with this address is not the performance of any merely formal or ceremonial function ; we come to offer you the love of our hearts and to give expression to our feeling of thankfulness for the services which you, by the grace of God, have been able to render to the great cause of Truth by proclaiming India's ancient and lofty religious ideals. When the Parliament of Religions was organized at Chicago, some of our countrymen felt naturally anxious that our noble and ancient religion should be worthily represented therein and properly expounded to the American nation and through them, to the Western World at large. It was then our privilege to meet you and to realise once again, what has so often proved true in the history of nations, that with the hour rises the man who is to help forward the cause of Truth. When you undertook to represent Hinduism in the Parliament of Religions, most of us felt, from what we had known of your great gifts, that the cause of Hinduism would be ably upheld by its representative in that memorable religious assembly. Your presentation of the doctrines of Hinduism at once clear correct, and authoritative not only produced a remarkable impression in the Parliament of Religions itself but has also led a number of men and women even in foreign lands to realise that out of the fountain of Indian spirituality refreshing draughts of immortal life and love may be taken, so as to bring about a larger, fuller and holier evolution of humanity than has yet been witnessed on this globe of ours. We are particularly thankful to you for having called the attention of the representatives of the World's Great Religions to the characteristic Hindu doctrine of the Harmony and Brotherhood of Religions. No longer is it possible for really enlightened and earnest men to insist that Truth and Holiness are the exclusive possessions of any particular locality or body of men or system of doctrine and discipline or to hold that any faith or philosophy will survive to the exclusion and destruction of all others. In your own happy language which brings out fully the sweet harmony in the heart of the Bhagavad Gitâ "The whole world of religions is only a travelling, a coming up of different men and women through various conditions and circumstances to the same goal." Had you contented yourself with simply discharging this high and holy duty entrusted to your care, even then, your Hindu co-religionists would have been glad to recognize with joy and thankfulness the inestimable value of your work. But in making your way into Western countries you have also been the bearer of a message of light and peace to the whole of mankind based on the old teachings of India's "Religion Eternal" In thanking you for all that you have done in the way of upholding the profound rationality of the religion of the Vedānta, it gives us great pleasure to allude to the great task you have in view, of establishing an active mission with permanent centres for the propagation of our religion and philosophy. The undertaking to which you propose to devote your energies is worthy of the holy tradition, you represent, and worthy, too, of the spirit of the great Guru who has inspired your life and its aims. We hope and trust that it may be given to us also to associate ourselves with you in this noble work. We fervently pray to Him who is the all-knowing and all-merciful Lord of the Universe to bestow on you long life and full strength and to bless your labours with that crown of glory and success which ever deserves to shine on the brow of immortal Truth.

Addresses were read, also, on behalf of the Vidvat Vaidika Sabha, and the Social Reform Association of Madras. The following address from the Maharajah of Khetri was read by Munshi Jagamohan Lal, Member of Council of the Chiefship of Khetri in Rajputana, who had been expressly sent by the Maharajah to meet Swami Vivekananda in Madras:—

YOUR HOLINESS.—

I wish to take this early opportunity of your arrival and reception at Madras to express my feelings of joy and pleasure on your safe return to India and to offer my heartfelt congratulations on the great success which has attended your unselfish efforts in Western lands where it is the boast of the highest intellects that “not an inch of ground once conquered by science has ever been reconquered by Religion”—although indeed Science has hardly ever claimed to oppose true Religion. This holy land of Aryavarta has been singularly fortunate in having been able to secure so worthy a representative of her sages at the Parliament of Religions held at Chicago, and it is entirely due to your wisdom, enterprise and enthusiasm that the Western world has come to understand what an inexhaustible store of spirituality India has even to-day. Your labours have now proved beyond the possibility of doubt that the contradictions of the world's numerous creeds are all reconciled in the universal light of the Vedánta and that all the peoples of the world have need to understand and practically realize the great truth that 'unity in variety' is nature's plan in the evolution of the universe, and that only by harmony and brotherhood among Religions and by mutual toleration and help can the mission and destiny of humanity be accomplished. Under your high and holy auspices and the inspiring influence of your lofty teachings, we of the present generation have the privilege of witnessing the inauguration of a new era in the world's history in which bigotry, hatred and conflict may, I hope, cease and peace, sympathy and love reign among men. And I in common with my people pray that the blessings of God may rest on you and your labours.

When the addresses had been read the Swami left the hall and mounted to the box seat of a carriage in the rear. There must have been at least ten thousand people around, and as only a small proportion could hear, those on the outside in their endeavors to approach the carriage quite prevented any chance of holding a successful meeting. However, the Swami was able to make the following short reply, postponing his reply proper to a further occasion :—

Man proposes and God disposes, so it is said, gentlemen. It was proposed that the addresses and the replies should be carried in the English fashion. But here God disposes, I am speaking to a scattered audience from the charriot in the Gita fashion. Thankful we are, therefore, that it should have happened. It gives a zest to the speech, and strength to what I am going to tell you. I do not know whether my voice will reach all of you, but I will try my best. I never before had an opportunity of addressing a large open air meeting. The wonderful kindness, the fervent and enthusiastic joy with which I have been received from Colombo to Madras, and seem likely to be received with all over India, have, passed even my most sanguine expectations, but that only makes me glad ; for it proves the assertion which I have made again and again in the past, that as each nation has one ideal as its vitality, as each nation has one particular grove which is to become its own, so religion is the peculiarity of the growth of the Indian mind. In other parts of the world religion is one of the many considerations, in fact it is a minor occupation. In England, for instance, religion is part of the national policy. The English Church belongs to the ruling class, and, as such, whether they believe in it or not, they all support it, thinking that it is their Church. Every gentleman and every lady is expected to belong to that Church. It is a sign of gentility. So with other countries, there is a great national power ; either it is represented by politics or it is represented by some intellectual pursuits ; either it is represented by militarism or commercialism. There the heart of the nation beats ; and religion is one of the many secondary ornamental things which that nation possesses. Here in India it is religion that forms the very core of the national heart. It is the back-bone, the bed-rock, the foundation upon which the national building has been built. Politics, power, even intellect form a secondary consideration here. Religion, therefore, is the one consideration in India. I have been told a hundred times of the want of information there is among the masses of the Indian people, and that is true. Landing in Colombo I found not one of them had heard of the political upheavals going on in Europe, the changes, the downfall of ministries, and so forth. Not one of them had heard of what is meant by socialism, and anarchism, of this and that change in the political atmosphere of Europe. But that there was a Sanyásin from India sent over to the Parliament of Religions, that he had achieved some sort of success, had become known to every man, woman, and every child, in Ceylon. It proves that there is no lack of information, nor lack of desire for information where it is of the character that suits them, when it falls in line with the necessities of their life. Politics and all these things never formed a necessity of Indian life, but Religion and spirituality have been the one condition upon which it lived and thrived, and has got to live in the future. Two great problems are being decided by the nations of the world, India has taken up one side, and the rest of the world has taken the other side. And the problem is this; who is to survive? What makes one nation survive and the others die, whether love should survive or hatred, whether enjoyment should survive or renunciation; whether matter should survive or the spirit, in the struggle of life. We think as our ancestors away back in historical ages did, where even tradition cannot pierce the gloom of that past; there our glorious ancestors have taken up their side of the problem and have thrown the challenge to the world. Our solution is renunciation, giving up, powerlessness, and love, these are the fittest to survive. Giving up the senses makes a nation to survive, As a proof of this, here is History to-day telling us of mushroom nations rising and falling almost every century—starting up from nothingness, making a vicious play for a few days and then melting.

This gigantic, big race, with some of the greatest problems of misfortune, and danger, and vicissitude, which never fell upon the head of any other nation of the world, survive because it has taken the side of Renunciation, for without Renunciation how can there be Religion. Europe is trying to solve the other side of the problem how much a man can have ; how much more power a man can possess, by hook or crook, by some means or other. Competition, cruel, cold, and heartless, is the law of Europe. Ours is caste, breaking competition, checking its forces mitigating its cruelties, smoothening the passage of the human soul through this mystery of life.

At this stage the crowd became so unmanageable that the Swami could not make himself heard to advantage. He therefore ended his address with these words :—

Friends I am very much pleased with your enthusiasm. It is marvellous. Do not think that I am displeased with you at all ; I am, on the other hand, intensely pleased at the show of enthusiasm. That is what is required—tremendous enthusiasm. Only make it permanent ; keep it up. Let not the fire die out. We want to work great things in India. For that I require your help ; such enthusiasm is necessary. It is impossible to hold this meeting any longer. I thank you very much for your kindness and enthusiastic welcome. In calm moments we shall have better thoughts and ideas to exchange ; now for the time my friends good bye.

It is impossible to address you on all sides therefore you must content yourselves this evening with merely seeing me. I will reserve the speech to some other occasion. I thank you very much for your enthusiastic welcome.”

Five other lectures were given in Madras, of all of which reports follow. For the first of these the Swami selected. "My Plan of Campaign" as his subject. He said,—

As the other day we could not proceed, owing to the crowd, I shall take this opportunity of thanking the people of Madras for the uniform kindness that I have received at their hands. I do not know how more to express my gratitude for the beautiful words that have been expressed in everyone of those addresses, excepting that I pray the Lord to make me worthy of the kind and generous expressions, and may I work all my life for the cause of our religion, and to serve our mother land, and may the Lord make me worthy of them. Gentlemen, with all my faults I think I have a little bit of boldness. I had a message from India to the West and boldly I gave it to the American and the English people. I want, before going into the subject of the day, to speak a few bold words to you all. There have been certain circumstances growing around me, trying to thwart me, oppose my progress, and crush me out of existence, if they could. Thank God they have failed, as such attempts will always fail. But there has been, for the last three years, a certain amount of misunderstanding, and so long as I was in foreign lands, I held my silence, and did not even speak one word; but now, standing upon the soil of my motherland, I want a few words of explanation. Not that I care what the result will be of these words—not that I care what feeling I shall evoke from you by these words; I care very little, I am the same Sanyâsin that entered your city about four years ago with his staff and kamandalu; the same broad world is before me. Without further preface let me begin. First of all, I have to say a few words about the Theosophical Society it goes without saying that a certain amount of good work has been done to India by the Theosophical Society ; as such, every Hindu is grateful to these people, especially to Mrs. Besant, for, though I know very little of her, yet what little I know has impressed me with the idea that she is a sincere well-wisher of this motherland of ours, and that she is doing the best in her power to raise our country. For that, the eternal gratitude of every true-born Indian is hers; and all blessings be on her and hers for ever. But that is one thing—and joining the Society of the Theosophists is another. Regard and estimation and love are one thing and swallowing every thing any one has to say, without reasoning, without criticising, without analysing, is quite another. There is another talk going round that the Theosophists helped the little achievements of mine in America and in England. I have to tell you in plain words that every bit of it is wrong, every bit of it is untrue. We hear so much tall-talk in this world of liberal ideas and sympathy with differences of opinion. That is very good, but as a fact we find that one sympathises with another so long as the other believes in everything he has got to say, and as soon as he dares to differ, that sympathy is gone, that love vanishes. There are others, again, who have their own axes to grind; and if anything arises in a country which prevents the grinding of their own axes, their hearts burn, any amount of hatred comes out, and they do not know what to do. What harm to the Christian missionary that the Hindus are trying to cleanse their own houses? What injury will it do to the Brahma Samaj and other reform bodies that the Hindus are trying their best to reform themselves? Why should they stand in opposition? Why should they be the greatest enemies of these movements? Why? I ask. It seems to me that their hatred and jealousy are so bitter that no why or how can be asked there.

One word more, I read in the organ of the social reformers that I am called a Sûdra and am challenged as to what right a Sûdra has to become a Sanyâsin. To which I reply—if my caste is the Sûdra, then the editor's caste is the Pariah. I trace my descent to one at whose feet every Brahmin lays flowers when he utters the words—yamāya dharmarājāya chētraguptāya vai namah—and whose descendants are the purest of Kshatriyas. If you believe in your mythology, or your Puranic scriptures, let these Bengalee reformers know that my caste, apart from other services in the past, ruled half of India for centuries. If my caste is left out of consideration, what will there be left of the present day civilisation of India? In Bengal alone, my blood has furnished them with their greatest philosopher, the greatest poet, the greatest historian, the greatest archæologist, the greatest religious preachers; my blood has furnished India with the greatest of her modern scientists. My caste is the Sûdra! Then this editor, I again repeat, is Pariah. He ought to have known a little of our own history, and to have known a little of our three castes, the Brahmin, the Khastrya, and the Vaisya have equal right to be Sanyâsins; the Trivarnika have equal rights to the Vedas. This was all in the way. I just quoted this. I am not hurt at all if they call me a Sûdra. It will be a little reparation for the tyranny of my ancestors over the poor. If I am a Pariah I will be all the more glad, for I am the disciple of a man, who—the Brahmin of Brahmins—wanted to cleanse the house of a Pariah and of course the Pariah would not allow him; how could he? That this Brahmin Sanyâsin should come and cleanse his house! And this man woke up in the dead of night, entered surreptitiously the house of this Pariah, cleansed his W. C., and with his long hair wiped the place, and that he did day after day in order that he might make himself the servant of all. I bear the feet of that man on my head ; he is my hero ; that hero's life I will try to imitate. That is how a Hindu seeks to uplift you, how Hindus uplift the masses, and without any foreign influence. Twenty years of occidental civilisation brings the illustration of the man who wants to starve his own friend in a foreign land simply because this friend is popular, simply because he thinks that this man stands in the way of his making money. And the other is an illustration of what Hinduism itself will do, genuine, orthodox, and at home. Let any one of our reformers bring out that life, ready to cleanse the W. C. of a Pariah, and wipe it with his hair, and then I sit at his feet and learn, and not before that. One ounce of practice is worth twenty-thousand tons of big talk.

Now I come to the reform societies in Madras. They have been very kind to me. They have given me very kind words, and they have pointed out, and I heartily agree with them, that there is a difference between the reformers of Bengal and those of Madras. Many of you will remember that I have told you very often that Madras is in a very beautiful position just now. It has not got into the play of action and reaction as Bengal has done. Here there is steady and slow progress all through ; here is growth, and not reaction. In many cases, and to a certain extent, there is revival in Bengal, but in Madras it is not a revival, it is a growth, a natural growth. As such, I entirely agree with what the reformers point out as the difference between the two races ; but there is one difference which they do not understand. Some of these societies, I am afraid, try to intimidate me to join themselves. That is a strange thing for them to attempt. A man who has met starvation face to face for fourteen years of his life, who has not known what to eat the next day, and where to sleep, cannot be intimidated so easily. A man who dared to live where the thermometer registered thirty degrees below zero, almost without clothes, without knowing where the next meal was to come from, cannot be intimidated so easily in India. This is the first thing I will tell them—I have a little bit of will of my own. I have my little experience too and I have a message for the world which I will deliver without fear, and without care for the future. To the reformers I will point out, I am a greater reformer than any one of them. They want to reform only little bits. I want root and branch reform. Where we differ is exactly in the method. Theirs is the method of destruction, mine is that of construction. I do not believe in reform; I believe in growth. I do not dare to put myself in the position of God and dictate unto our society 'This way you should move and not that way.' I simply want to be like the squirrel in the building of Rama's bridge, who was quite content to put on the bridge his little quota of sand dust. That is my position. This wonderful national machine has worked through ages; this wonderful river of national life is flowing before us. Who knows, and who dares to say whether it is good, and how it shall move? Thousands of circumstances are crowding around it, giving it a special impulse, making it dull at times, and quicker at others. Who dares command its motion; ours is only to work, as the Gîtâ says, and stand by contented. Feed it with the fuel it wants, but the growth is its own; none can dictate its growth to it. Evils are plentiful in our society. So are there evils in every other society. Here the earth is soaked some times with widows' tears; there, in the West, the air is poisoned with the breath of sobs of the unmarried. Here poverty is the great bane of life; there the life-weariness of luxury is the great bane that is upon the race. Here men want to commit suicide because they have nothing to eat; there they commit suicide because they have so much to eat. Evil is everywhere, like old rheumatism. Drive it from the foot it goes to the head: drive it from there, it goes somewhere else. It is a question of chasing it from place to place; that is all. Aye, children, to remedy evil is the true way. Our philosophy teaches that evil and good are eternally enjoined, the obverse and the reverse of the same metal. Have one, you have to get the other; make one billow in the ocean, it must be at the cost of some hollow somewhere. Nay, all life is evil. No breath can be breathed without killing someone else; not a morsel of food can be eaten without depriving some body of it. This is the law; this is philosophy. Therefore the only thing we can do is to understand that all this work against evil is more subjective than objective. The work against evil is more educational than actual, however big we may talk. Aye, this first of all is the idea of work against evil, and it ought to make us calmer, it ought to take fanaticism out of our blood; and then the history of the world teaches us that wherever there have been fanatical reforms the only result has been that they have defeated their own ends. No greater upheaval for the establishment of right and liberty can be imagined than the war for the abolition of slavery in America. You all know about it. And what has been its result? The slaves are a hundred times worse off to-day than they were before the abolition. Before the abolition, these poor negroes were the property of somebody, and, as properties, they had to be looked after so that they might not deteriorate. To-day they are the property of nobody. Their lives are of no value; they are burnt alive on mere pretences. They are shot down without any law for their murderers; for they are niggers, they are not human beings, they are not even animals; and that is the effect of such violent taking away of evil by law, or by fanaticism. Such is the testimony of history against every fanatical movement, even for doing good. I have seen that. My own experience has taught me that. Therefore I cannot join anyone of these condemning societies. Why condemn? There are evils in every society; everybody knows it; every child of to-day knows it; he can stand upon a platform and give us a harangue on the awful evils in Hindu Society. Every uneducated foreigner who comes here globe-trotting, takes a vanishing railway view of India, and lectures most learnedly on the awful evils in India. We admit it. Everybody can show what evil is, but he is the friend of mankind who finds a way out of the difficulty. Like the drowning boy and the philosopher, when the philosopher was lecturing him—"Take me out of the water first;" so our people cry "We have had lectures enough, societies enough, papers enough, where is the man who lends us a hand to drag us out? Where is the man who loves us really? Where is the man that has sympathy with us?" Aye, that man is wanted. That is where I differ entirely from these reform movements. A hundred years they have been here. What good has been done, excepting the creation of a most vituperative, a most condemnatory literature? Would to God it was not there! They have criticised, condemned, abused the orthodox until the orthodox have caught their tone, and paid them back in their own coin, and the result is the creation of a literature in every vernacular which is the shame of the race, the shame of the country. Is this reform? Is this leading the nation to glory? Whose fault is this?

There is, then, another great consideration. Here, in India, we have always been governed by kings ; kings have made all our laws ; now the kings are gone, and there is no one left to make a move. The Government dare not ; it has to fashion its ways according to the growth of public opinion. It takes time, quite a long time, to make a healthy, strong, public opinion which will solve its own problems, and in the interim we shall have to wait. The whole problem of social reform, therefore, resolves itself into this : where are those who want reform ? Make them first Where are the people ? The tyranny of a minority is the worst tyranny that the world ever sees. A few men who think that certain things are evil will not make a nation move ? Why does not the nation move ? First educate the nation, create your legislative body, and then the law will be forthcoming. First create the power, the sanction from which the law will spring. The kings are gone ; where is the new sanction, the new power, of the people ? Bring it up. Therefore, even for social reform, the first duty is to educate the people, and you must have to wait till that time comes. Most of the reforms that have been agitated for during the last century have been ornamental. Every one of these reforms only touches the first two castes, and no other. The question of widow marriage would not touch seventy per cent. of the Indian women, and all such questions only reach the higher castes of Indian people who are educated, mark you, at the expense of the masses. Every effort has been spent in cleaning their own houses, making themselves nice and in looking pretty before foreigners. That is no reformation. You must go down to the basis of the thing, to the very roots. That is what I call radical reformation. Put the fire there and let it burn upwards and make an Indian nation. And the problem is not so easy. It is a big and a vast problem before us ; be not in a hurry and, mark my words, this problem has been known these several hundred years. To-day it is the fashion to talk of Buddhism, and Buddhist agnosticism, especially in the South. Little do they dream that this degradation which we have in our hands to-day has been left by Buddhism.

This is the legacy which Buddhism has left in our hands. You read in books written by men who had never studied the rise and fall of Buddhism that the spread of Buddhism was owing to the wonderful ethics and the wonderful personality of Gautama Buddha. I have every respect and veneration for Lord Buddha, but mark my words, the spread of Buddhism was less owing to the doctrines and less owing to the personality of the great preacher, than to the temples that were built, the idols that were erected, and the gorgeous ceremonies that were put before the nation. Thus Buddhism progressed. The little fire-places in the houses in which the people poured their libations were not strong enough to hold their own against these gorgeous temples and ceremonies, and later on the whole thing degenerated. It became a mass of filth of which I cannot speak before this audience, but those who want to know it may look into those big temples, full of sculptures, in Southern India, and this is all the inheritance we have from the Buddhists. Then arose the great reformer, Sankarâcharya and his followers, and all these hundreds of years since his rising, to the present day, have been the slow bringing back of the Indian masses to the pristine purity of the Vedântic religion. These reformers knew well the evils which existed, yet they did not condemn. They did not say, 'All that you have is wrong, and you must throw it out.' It could never be so. To-day I read that my friend, Dr.

Barrōws, says that in 300 years Christianity overthrew the Roman and Greek religious influences. That is not the word of a man who has seen Europe, and Greece, and Rome. The influence of Roman and Greek religion is all there, even in Protestant countries, only with changed names, old gods coming in a new fashion. They change their names; the goddesses become Marys and the gods become saints, and the ceremonials become new; even the old title of Pontifex Maximus is there.

So these changes cannot be. They are not so easy, and Sankarāchārya knew it. So did Rāmānuja. These changes cannot be. The only other way left them was slowly to bring up to the highest ideal, the existing religion. If they had sought to apply the other method they would have been hypocrites, for the very fundamental doctrine of their religion is evolution, the soul going up towards the highest goal, through all these various stages and phases, and all these stages and phases, therefore, are necessary and helpful, and who dares condemn them?

It has become a trite saying, and every man swallows it at the present time without questioning, that idolatry is wrong. Aye, I once thought so, and for the penalty of that I had to learn my lesson sitting at the feet of a man who got his everything from idols; I allude to Rāmakrishna Paramahamsa. Hindus, if such Rāmakrishna Paramahamsas are produced by idol worship, what will you have—the reformer's creed or any number of idols? I want an answer. Take a thousand idols more if you can produce Rāmakrishna Paramahamsas through idol worship. God speed you! Produce such noble natures by any means you have. And idolatry is condemned! Why? Nobody knows. Because some hundreds of years ago some man of Jewish blood happened to condemn it. That is, he happened to condemn everybody else's idols except his own. If God is represented in any beautiful form, or any symbolic form, said the Jew, it is awfully bad ; it is sin. But if he is represented in the form of a chest, with two angels sitting on each side, and a cloud hanging over it, it is the Holy of Holies. If God comes in the form of a dove, it is the Holy of Holies. But if he comes in the form of a cow, it is heathen superstition ; condemn it. That is how the world goes. That is why the poet says, " what fools we mortals be ! " That is why it is difficult to look through each other's eyes, and that is the bane of humanity. That is the basis of hatred and jealousy, of quarrel and of fight. Boys, mustached babies, who never went out of Madras, standing up and wanting to dictate laws to three hundred millions of people, with thousands of traditions at their back ! Are you not ashamed ? Stand back from such blasphemy, and learn first your lessons ! Irreverent boys, simply because you can scrawl a few lines upon a paper and get some fool to publish it for you, you think you are the educators of the world, you think you are the public opinion of India ! Is it so ? Therefore, this I have to tell to the social reformers of Madras, that I have the greatest respect and love for them. I love them for their great hearts and their love for their country, for the poor, for the oppressed. But what I would tell them with a brother's love is that their method is not right. It has been tried a hundred years and failed. Let us try some new method, and that is all. Did India want for reformers ever ? Do you read the history of India ? Who was Rāmānuja ? Who was Sankara ? Who was Nānak ? Who was Chaitanya ? Who was Kabir ? Who was Dādu ? Who were all these great preachers, one following the other, a galaxy of stars of the first magnitude ? Did not Rāmānuja feel for the lower classes ? Did not he try all his life to admit even the Pariah to his community? Did he not try to admit even Mahomedans to his own fold? Did not Nànak confer with Hindus and Mahommedans, and try to bring about a new state of things? They all tried, and their work is going on. The difference is this. They had not the fanfarronade of the reformers of to-day; they had not curses on their lips as modern reformers have. Their lips pronounced only blessings. They never condemned. They said unto the people that the race must always grow. They looked back and they said, "O Hindus, what you have done is good, but my brothers let us do better." They did not say, "You have been wicked, now let us be good." They said, "you have been good, but let us now be better." That makes a whole world of difference. We must grow according to our nature. Vain it is to attempt the lines of action foreign societies have engrafted upon us; impossible it is. Glory unto God that it is impossible, that we cannot be twisted and tortured into the shape of other nations. I do not condemn the institutions of other races; they are good for them, but not for us. What is meat for them may be poison for us. This is the first lesson to learn. With other sciences, other institutions, and other traditions behind them, they have got their present system. We, with our traditions, with thousands of years of Karma behind us, naturally can only follow our own bent, run in our own grooves, and that we shall have to do.

What is my plan then? My plan is to follow the ideas of the great ancient masters. I have studied their work, and it has been given unto me to discover the line of action they took. They were the great originators of Society. They were the great givers of strength, and of purity, and of life. They did most marvellous work. We have to do most marvellous work also, Circumstances have become a little different ;for that the lines of action have to be changed a little, and that is all. I see that each nation, like each individual, has one theme in this life, which is its centre, the principal note around which every other note comes to form the harmony. In another race political power is its vitality, as in England. Artistic life in another and so on. In India religious life forms the centre, the keynote of the whole music of national life, and if any nation attempts to throw off its natural vitality, the direction which has become its own through transmission of centuries, the nation dies—if it succeeds in the attempt. And, therefore, if you succeed in the attempt to throw off your religion and take up either politics or society or any other thing as your centre, as the vitality of your national life, the result will be that you will become extinct. To prevent this you must make all and everything work through that vitality of your religion. Let all your nerves sing their chords through the backbone of your religion. I have seen that I cannot preach even religion in America without showing them its practical effect on social life. I could not preach religion in England without showing the wonderful political changes the Vedànta would bring. So, in India, social reform has to be preached by showing how much more spiritual a life the new system will bring, and politics has to be preached by showing how much it will improve the one thing the nation wants, its spirituality. Every man has his own choice ; so has every nation. We made our choice ages ago and we must abide by it. And, after all, it is not such a bad choice. Is it such a bad choice in this world to think, not matter but spirit, not man but God? That intense faith in another world, that intense hatred for this world, the intense power of renunciation, the intense faith in God the intense faith in the immortal soul, is in you. I challenge any one to give it up. You cannot, you may try to impose upon me by becoming materialists, talking materialism for a few months, but I know what you are ; I put my hand on your head, and back you come again as good theists as ever were born. How can you change your nature? That is where you are. So every improvement in India requires first of all an upheaval in religion. To flood India with socialistic or political ideas, first deluge the land with spiritual ideas ; that is the first thing to be done. The first work that demands our attention is that the wonderful truths confined in our Upanishads, in our Scriptures, in our Purānas—most marvellous truths—must be brought out from the books, brought out from the monasteries, brought out from the forests, brought out from the possession of selected bodies of people, and scattered broadcast all over the land, so that the word may run all over the country, from north to south, and east to west, from Himalayas to Comorin, from Scindh to Brahmputra. Every one must know of them because it is said—This has first to be heard, then thought upon, and then meditated. Let the people hear first, and whoever helps in making the people hear about the great truths in their own scriptures. does a karma to-day that will never be done by anything else that you can do. Says our Vyāsa, “ In this kaliyuga there is one karma left. The sacrifices and tremendous Tapases are of no avail now. Of karma one remains, and that is the karma of giving. And of these gifts, the gift of spirituality and spiritual knowledge is the highest ; the next gift is the gift of secular knowledge ; the next is the gift of life ; and the fourth the gift of food. Look at this wonderfully charitable race ; look at the amount of gifts that are made in this poor, poor country ; look at the hospitality, where a man can travel from the north to the south, having the best of the land, just as if he is friendly, where no beggar starves so long as there is a piece of bread anywhere.

In this land of charity let us take up the energy of the first two charities, the diffusion of spiritual knowledge, and that diffusion also should not be confined within the bounds of India ; it must go out all over the world. This has been the custom. Those that tell you that Indian thought never went outside of India, those that tell you that I am the first Sanyásin who went to foreign lands to preach, do not know the history of their own race. Again and again this phenomenon has happened. Whenever the world has required it this perennial flood of spirituality has overflowed and flooded the world. Gifts of political knowledge can be made with the blast of trumpets, and the march of cohorts. Gifts of secular knowledge and social knowledge can be made with fire and sword ; but spiritual knowledge can only be given in silence, like the dew that falls unseen and unheard, yet bringing into bloom masses of roses. This has been the gift of India to the world again and again. Whenever there has been a great conquering race, bringing the nations of the world together, making roads and transit possible, immediately India arose and gave her quota of spiritual power to the sum-total of the progress of the world. This has been ages before Buddha was born and the remnants of it are left still in China, yet in Asia Minor, yet in the heart of the Malayan Archipelago. This was the case when the great Greek conqueror united the four corners of the known world ; then rushed out Indian spirituality, and the boasted civilisation of the West is but the little remnant of that deluge. Now the same opportunity has come ; the power of England has linked the nations of the world together as was never done before. English roads and channels of communication rush from one end of the world to the other. To-day the world has been linked in such a fashion, owing to English genius, as has never before been done. To-day trade centres have been formed such as have never been before in the history of mankind, and immediately, consciously or unconsciously, India rises up and pours forth her gifts of spirituality, and they must rush through these roads till they have reached the very ends of the world. That I went to America was not my doing, or your doing, but the God of India, who is guiding its destiny will send me, and send hundreds such to all the nations of the world. No power on earth can resist it. This also has to be done. You must go out to preach your religion, preach it to every nation under the sun, preach it to every people. This is the first thing to do. And after preaching spiritual knowledge, along with it will come that secular knowledge and every other knowledge you want, but if you attempt to get the secular knowledge without religion I tell you plainly, vain is your attempt in India, it will never have a hold on the people. Even the great Buddhistic movement was a failure partially on account of that. What can you or I do if it failed? Therefore, my friends, my plan is to start institutions in India, to train our young men to make them preachers of the truths of our scriptures, inside India and outside India. Men, men, these are wanted : everything else will be ready ; strong, sincere to the backbone, vigorous, believing young men are wanted. A hundred such and the world becomes revolutionised. The will is stronger than anything else. Everything must go down before the will, for that comes from God and God Himself ; a pure and a strong will is omnipotent. Do you not believe in it ? Preach, preach unto them the great truths of your religion ; the world waits for them. People have been taught for centuries theories of degradation. They have been told that they are nothing. The masses have been told all over the world that they are not human beings. They have been frightened so for centuries, till they have nearly become animals. Never were they allowed to hear of the Atman. Let them hear of the Atman—that even the lowest of the low have the Atman inside, which never dies and never is born—Him whom the sword cannot pierce, nor the fire burn, nor the air dry, immortal, without beginning or end, the all pure, omnipotent and omnipresent Atman! Let them have faith in themselves, for what makes the difference between the English man and you? Let them talk their religion and duty and so forth, I have found the difference. The difference is here, that the Englishman believes in himself, and you do not. He believes in his being an Englishman and he believes he can do anything. That brings out the God within him, and he can do anything he likes. You have been told and taught that you can do nothing, and non-entities you are becoming every day. Therefore, believe in yourselves. What we want is strengthening. We have become weak, and that is why occultisms and mysticisms come to us, these creepy things; there may be great truth in them, but they have nearly destroyed us. Make your nerves strong. What we want is muscles of iron and nerves of steel. We have wept long. No more weeping, but stand on your feet and be men. It is man-making religion that we want. It is man-making theories that we want. It is man-making education all round that we want. And here is the test of truth anything that makes you weak physically, intellectually and spiritually, reject it as poison, there is no life in it, it cannot be true. Truth is strengthening. Good is purity, good is all knowledge; truth must be strengthening, must be enlightening, must be invigorating. These mysticisms, in spite of some grains of truth in them are generally weakening. Believe me, I have my life-long experience for it, I have travelled every inch of India, searched almost every cave here, lived in the Himalayas for years; know people who lived there all their lives, and the one conclusion that I draw is that it is weakening. And I love my nation, I cannot see you degraded, weakened any more, weak that you are now. Therefore I am bound for your sake and for truth's sake to cry, " Hold !" and to raise my voice against this degradation of my race. Stop where you are ; be strong. Go back to your Upanishads, the shining, the strengthening, the bright philosophy, and part from all these mysterious things, all these weakening things. Take up this philosophy ; the greatest truths are the simplest things in the world, simple as your own existence. Before you are these truths of the Upanishads. Take them up, live up to them and the salvation of India will be found.

One word more and I have finished. They talk of patriotism. I believe in patriotism. I also have my own ideal of patriotism. Three things are necessary for great achievements. First feel, from the heart. What is in the intellect? Reason? It goes a few steps and there it stops. But through the heart comes inspiration. Love opens the most impossible gates ; love is the gate to all the secrets of the universe. Feel, therefore, my would-be reformers, would-be patriots. Do you feel? Do you feel that millions and millions of the descendants of gods and of sages have become next door neighbours to brutes? Do you feel that millions are starving to-day, and millions have been starving for ages? Do you feel that ignorance has come over the land as a dark cloud? Does it make you restless? Does it make you sleepless? Has it gone into your blood, coursing through your veins, becoming consonant with your heart beats? Has it made you almost mad, are you seized with that one idea of the misery of ruin, and have you forgotten all about your name, all about your fame, your wives your children, your property, even your own bodies? Have you done that? That is the first step to becoming a patriot, the first step. I did not go to America, as most of you know, for the Parliament of Religions but this demon of a feeling was in me and within my soul. I have travelled twelve years all over India, finding no way how to work, and that is why I went to America. Most of you know it who knew me then. Who cares about this Parliament of Religions? Here are my own flesh and blood sinking every day, and who cares for them? This is the first step.

You may feel then, but have you found any way out, some practical solution, instead of spending your energies in frothy talk; some help instead of condemnation, some sweet words to sooth their miseries, to bring them out of this living death? Yet that is not all. Have you got the will to do against mountain-high obstructions? If the whole world stands against you sword in hand, would you dare still do what you think is right? If your children are against you, and your wives, if all your money goes, your name dies away, your wealth vanishes, would you still stick to it? Would you still pursue it and go on steadily towards your own goal; as the great King Bhartrihari says—"Let the sages blame or let them praise; let the goddess of fortune come or let her go wherever she likes; let death come to-day, or let it come in hundreds of years; he indeed is the steady man who does not move one inch from the way of truth." Have you got that? If you have these three things each one of you will work miracles; you need not write in the newspapers; you need not go about lecturing. Your very face will shine. If you live in a cave your thoughts will permeate even through the stone walls, go vibrating all over the world for hundreds of years, may be, until it will catch hold of some brain, and work out there. Such is the power of thought, of sincerity, and of purity of purpose.

One word more. I am afraid I am delaying you. This national ship, my countrymen, my friends, my children—this national ship has been ferrying millions and millions of souls across the waters of life. For scores of shining centuries it has been plying across this water, and scores of millions of souls have been taken to the other shore, to blessedness, through its agency. But to day, perhaps through your own fault, this boat has taken a leak, perhaps it has become a little damaged—would you curse it? Is it fit that you stand up and pronounce malediction upon its head, one that has done more work than any other thing in the world? If there are holes in this national ship, this society of ours, we are its children. Let us go there and stop the holes. If we cannot, let us gladly do it with our hearts blood, or die. We will make a plug of our brains and put them into the ship, but condemn it, never. Say not one harsh word against this society. I love it for its past greatness. I love you all because you are the children of gods, you are the children of glorious forefathers. All blessings be on you! Curse you! Never. I have come to you, my children, to tell you all my plans. If you hear them I am ready to work with you. If you hear them not, even kick me out of India, I will come back and tell you—we are all sinking; thererore, I am come to sit in the midst of you, and, if we are to sink, let us all sink together, and never let us curse.

The following lecture was given on “The Vedanta in its application to Indian Life”:

There is a word which has become very common as an appellation of our race and our Religion. I mean the word "Hindu," which requires a little explanation in connection with what I mean by Vedántism. This word "Hindu" was the name that the ancient Persians used to apply to the river Sindhu. Wherever in Sanskrit there is an "S" in ancient Persian it changes into "H," so that "Sindhu" became "Hindu"; and you are all aware how the Greeks found it hard to pronounce "H" and dropped it altogether, so that we became Indians, and so on. Now this word, whatever might have been its meaning in ancient times, as the inhabitants of the other side of the Indus, has lost all its force in modern times; for all the people that live on this side of the Indus no more belong to one religion. There are the Hindus proper, the Mahomedans, the Parsees, the Christians, some Buddhists and Jains. The word "Hindu" in its literal sense ought to include all these; but as signifying the Religion it would not be proper to call all these Hindus. It is very hard, therefore to find any common name for our Religion seeing that this Religion is a collection, so to speak, of various religions, of various ideas, of various ceremonials, and forms, all gathered together almost without a name, and without a church, and without an organization. The only point where, perhaps, all our sects agree is here, that we all believe in the Scriptures—the Vedas. This perhaps is certain that no man can have a right to be called a Hindu who does not admit the supreme authority of the Vedas. All these Vedas, as all of you are aware, are divided into two portions—the Karma Kânda and the Jñâna Kânda, the Karma Kânda including various sacrifices and ceremonials, of which the larger part has become disused in the present age. The Jñâna Kânda, as embodying the spiritual teachings of the Vedas known as the Upanishads and the Vedānta, have always been cited as the highest authority by all our teachers, our philosophers, and our writers, whether Dualist, or Qualified Monist, or Monist. Whatever be his philosophy or sect, every one in India has to find his authority in the Upanishads. If he cannot, his sect would be heterodox. Therefore perhaps the one name in modern times which would designate every Hindu throughout the land would be "Vedāntist" or "Vaidik" as you may put it; and in that sense I always use the words "Vedāntism" and "Vedānta". I want to make it a little clearer, for of late it has become the custom of most people to identify the word Vedānta with the Advaitic system of the Vedānta Philosophy. We all know that Advaitism is only one branch of the various philosophic systems that have been founded on the Upanishads. The followers of the Visishtadvaitic system have as much reverence for the Upanishads as the followers of the Advaita, and the Visishtadvaitists claim as much authority for the Vedānta as the Advaitist. So do the Dualists; so does every other sect in India; but the word Vedāntist has become somewhat identified in the popular mind with the Advaitist, and perhaps with some reason because, although we have the Vedas for our Scriptures, we have Smritis and Purānas,—subsequent writings—to illustrate the doctrines of the Vedas; these of course have not the same weight as the Vedas. And the law is that wherever these Purānas and Smritis differ from any part of the Sruti, the Sruti must be followed and the Smriti rejected. Now in the expositions of the great Advaitic philosopher Sankara, and the school founded by him we find most of the authorities cited are of the Upanishads, very rarely is an authority cited from the Smritis, except, perhaps, to elucidate a point which could hardly be found in the Srutis. On the other hand other schools take more and more refuge in the Smritis and less and less in the Srutis, and as we go to the more and more Dualistic sects we find a proportionate quantity of the Smritis quoted which is out of all proportion to what we should expect from a Vedantist. It is perhaps because these gave such predominance to the Puranic authorities that the Advaitist came to be considered as the Vedantist par excellence, if I may say so.

However it might have been, as we have seen, the word Vedánta must cover the whole ground of Indian Religious life, and it being the Vedas, by all acceptance it is the most ancient literature that we have ; for whatever might be the idea of modern scholars, the Hindus are not ready to admit that parts of Vedas were written at one time and parts were written at another time. They of course still hold on to their belief that the whole of the Vedas were produced at the same time, rather if I may so call it---they were never produced, that they always existed in the mind of the Lord. Thus this is what I mean by the word Vedánta, to cover the whole ground of Dualism, of Qualified Monism and Advaitism in India. Perhaps we may take in parts even of Buddhism, and of Jainism too, if they would come in,—for our hearts are sufficiently large. It is they that will not come in ; we are ready ; for upon severe analysis you will always find that the essence of Buddhism was all borrowed from the same Upanishads ; even the ethics, the so-called great and wonderful ethics of Buddhism, were word for word there, in some or other books of the Upanishads, and so all the good doctrines of the Jains were there minus their vagaries. In the Upanishads, also, we find the germs of all the subsequent development of Indian religious thought. Sometimes it has been urged without any ground whatsoever that there is no ideal of Bhakti in the Upanishads. Those that have been students of the Upanishads know that it is not true at all. There is enough of Bhakti in every Upanishad, if you will only seek for that ; but many other ideas which are found so fully developed in later times in the Puránas and other Smritis are only in the germ in the Upanishads. The sketch, the skeleton, was there, as it were. It was filled in in some of the Puránas. But there is not one full-grown Indian ideal that cannot be traced back to the same source—the Upanishads. Certain ludicrous attempts have been made by persons without much Upanishadic scholarship to trace Bhakti to some foreign source ; but as you all know these have all been proved to be failures and all that you want of Bhakti is there, even in the Samhitas, not to speak of the Upanishads—it is there worship and love and all the rest of that ; only the ideals of Bhakti are becoming higher and higher. In the Samhita portions, now and, then, you find traces of a religion of fear and tribulation ; in the Samhitas now and then you find a worshipper quaking before a Varuna, or some other god. Now and then you will find they are very much tortured by the idea of sin, but the Upanishads have no place for the delineation of these things. There is no religion of fear in the Upanishads ; it is one of Love, and one of Knowledge.

These Upanishads are our Scriptures. They have been differently explained, and, as I have told you already, whenever there is a difference between subsequent Purànic literature and the Vedas, the Puránas must give way. But it is at the same time true that as a practical result we find ourselves 90 per cent Purànics and 10 per cent Vaidiks, even if that at all. And we all find the most contradictory usages prevailing in our midst, religious opinions which scarcely have any authority in the Scriptures of the Hindus prevailing in societies, and in many cases we find with astonishment, we read books and see, customs of the country that neither have their authority in the Vedas, nor in the Smritis, nor in the Puránas, but are simply local customs ; and yet each ignorant villager thinks that if that little local custom dies out he will no more remain a Hindu. In his mind Vedántism and these little local customs have been indissolubly identified. In reading the Scriptures it is hard for him to understand that what he was doing has not the sanction of the Scriptures, and that the giving up of them will not hurt him at all, but on the other hand will make him a better man. Secondly, there is the other difficulty. These Scriptures of ours have been very vast. We read in the Mahábháshya of Patanjali, that great philological work, that the Sâma Veda had one thousand branches. Where are they all? Nobody knows. So with each of the Vedas, the major portion of these books has disappeared, and it is only the minor portion that remains to us. They were all taken charge of by particular families ; and either these families died out, or were killed under foreign persecution, or somehow became extinct ; and with them, that branch of the learning of the Vedas they took charge of became extinct also. This fact we ought to remember as it always forms the sheet-anchor in the hands of those who want to preach anything new, or to defend anything even, against the Vedas. Wherever we know in India there is a discussion between local custom and the Srutis, and whenever it is pointed out that the local custom is against the Scriptures, the argument that is forwarded is that it is not, that the custom existed in the branch of the Srutis which has become extinct ; this has also been a custom. In the midst of all these varying methods of reading and commenting on our Scriptures it is very difficult indeed to find the thread that runs through all of them ; for we become convinced at once that there must be some common ground underlying all these varying divisions and sub-divisions, there must be harmony, a common plan, upon which all these little bits of buildings have been constructed, some basis common to this apparently hopeless mass of confusion which we call our religion. Else it could not have stood so long, it could not have endured so long.

Coming to our commentators again, we find another difficulty. The very same Advaitic commentator, whenever an Advaitic text comes, preserves it just as it is ; but as soon as a Dualistic text presents itself before him he tortures it, if he can, brings the most queer meaning out of it. Sometimes the "Unborn" becomes a "goat," such wonderful changes. "Ajā" the "Unborn" is explained as "Ajā" a she-goat, to suit the commentator. In the same way, if not in a still worse fashion, the texts are handled by the Dualistic commentator. Every Dualistic text is preserved, and every text that speaks of non-dualistic philosophy, is tortured in any fashion they like. This Sanskrit language is so intricate, the Sanskrit of the Vedas is so ancient, and the Sanskrit philology so perfect, that any amount of discussion can be carried on for ages in regard to the meaning of any word. If a Pandit takes it into his head, anybody's prattle can be made into correct Sanskrit by force of argument and quotations of texts and rules. These are the difficulties in our way of understanding the Upanishads. It was given to me to live with a man who was as ardent a Dualist, as ardent an Advaitist, as ardent a Bhakta, as a Jnāni. And living with this man first put it into my head to understand the Upanishads and the texts of the Scriptures from an independent and better basis than blindly following the commentators ; and in my humble opinion, and in my humble researches, I came to this conclusion, that these texts are not at all contradictory. So we need not have any fear of text-torturing at all! They are beautiful, aye, they are most wonderful, and they are not contradictory, but wonderfully harmonious, one idea leading to the other. But the one fact I found is that in all the Upanishads you will find that they begin with Dualistic ideas, with worship and all that, and they end with a grand flourish of Advaitic ideas.

Now, therefore, I find, in the light of this man's life, that the Dualist and the Advaitist need not fight each other; each has a place, and a great place in the national life; the Dualist must remain; he is as much part and parcel of the national religious life as the Advaitist; one cannot exist without the other; one is the fulfilment of the other; one is the building, the other is the top; the one the root, the other the fruit, and so on. Then again any attempt to torture the texts of the Upanishads appears to me very ridiculous, for I begin to find out that the language was so wonderful; apart from all its merits as the greatest philosophy, apart from its wonderful merit as theology, as showing the path of salvation of mankind, the Upanishadic literature is the most wonderful painting of sublimity that the world has. Here comes out in full force that individuality of the human mind, that introspective intuitive Hindu mind. We have paintings of sublimity elsewhere in all nations, but almost without exception, you will find that their ideal is to grasp the sublime in the muscles. Take for instance, Milton, Dante, Homer or any of those Western Poets. There are wonderfully sublime passages in them; but there it is always grasping for the senses, the muscles getting the ideal of infinite expansion, the infinite of space. We find the same attempts in the Samhita portion.

You know some of those most wonderful Riks, where creation is described, and so on ; the very heights of expression of the sublime in expansion, the infinite in space is reached ; but, as it were, they found out very soon that the Infinite cannot be reached in that way, that even the infinite space and expansion and the infinite external nature could not express the ideas that were struggling to find expression in their minds, and they fell back upon other explanations. The language became new in the Upanishads ; it is almost negative, the language is sometimes chaotic, sometimes taking you beyond the senses, going half way and leaving you there, only pointing out to you something which you cannot grasp, which you cannot sense, and at the same time you feel certain that it is there. What passages in the World can compare with this ? Na tatra sūryó bhāti na chandra tārakam néma vidyuto bhānti kūttoyam agnih. " There the sun cannot illumine, nor the moon, nor the stars, the flash of lightning cannot illumine the place, what to speak of this mortal fire." Where can you find a more perfect expression of the whole philosophy of the whole world ; the gist of what the Hindus ever thought, the whole dream of human salvation, painted in language more wonderful, in figure more marvellous ? Dvā suparnā sayujā sakhāyā samānam vriksham parishasvajanti tayoranyah pippalam svadvatyanasnannanyo abhichākasīti &c., &c., &c. Upon the same tree there are two birds of beautiful plumage, most friendly to each other, one eating the fruits, the other without eating, sitting there calm and silent ; the one on the lower branch eating sweet and bitter fruits in turn and becoming happy and unhappy, but the one on the top calm and majestic ; eats neither sweet nor bitter, cares for neither happiness nor misery, immersed in his own glory. This is the picture of the human soul. Man is eating sweets and bitters of this life, pursuing gold pursuing his senses, pursuing the vanities of life, hopelessly, madly careering he goes. In other places the Upanishads have compared it to the charioteer and the mad horses unrestrained. Such is the career of men pursuing the vanities of life, children dreaming golden dreams to find that they were but vain, and old men chewing the cud of their past deeds, and yet not knowing how to get out of this net work. Thus we are ; yet in the life of every one there come golden moments, in the midst of deepest sorrows, nay of deepest joy there come moments when, as it were, a part of the cloud that hides the sun-light moves away, and we catch a glimpse in spite of ourselves of something beyond, away, away beyond the life of the senses, away, away beyond its vanities, its joys, and its sorrows, away, away beyond nature, in our imaginations of happiness here or hereafter, away beyond all thirst for gold, or for fame or for name, or for posterity. Man stops for a moment in this glimpse, he sees the other bird calm and majestic, eating neither sweet nor bitter fruits, immersed in his own glory, self-content, self-satisfied, as the Gîtâ says, Yastvâtmaratirevasyâdâtmatriptas cha mânavañ àtmanyeva cha santushtastasya kâryam na vidyate. "Those that have become satisfied in the Atman, those who do not want anything beyond Atman, what work is there for them? Why should they drudge?" He catches a glimpse, then again he forgets, he goes on eating sweet and bitter fruits of life, he forgets everything again ; perhaps after a time, he catches another glimpse, perhaps the lower bird comes nearer and nearer as blows are received ; if he be fortunate to receive hard knocks, then he comes nearer and nearer to the other bird his companion his life, his friend, and as he gets nearer he finds that the light from the other bird is playing round his own plumage, and as he comes nearer and nearer, lo! the transformation is going on. He finds himself melting away, nearer and nearer still he has come, he has entirely disappeared. He did not exist; it was but the reflection of the other bird, who was there calm and majestic on those moving leaves, it was he always, always so calm. It was his glory, that upper bird's. No more fear; perfectly satisfied, calmly serene, he remains. In this figure the Upanishad takes you from Dualistic to the utmost Advaitic conception. Examples can be added to examples, we have no time in this lecture to do that, to show the marvellous poetry of the Upanishads, the painting of the sublime, the grand conceptions; but one other idea, the language and the thought and everything come direct, they fall upon you like a sword blade, like a hammer blow they come. There is no mistaking their meanings. Every tone of that music is firm and produces its full effect; no gyrations, no mad words, no intricacies in which the brain is lost. Signs of degradation are not there; no attempts at too much allegorising, too much piling of adjectives after adjectives, making it more and more intricate, till the whole of the sense is lost, and the brain becomes giddy, and man does not know his way out from the maze of that literature, none of that yet. If it be human literature, it must be the production of a race which has not yet lost a bit of its national vigour. Strength, strength is what it talks to me from every page. This is the one great thing to remember; it has been the one great lesson I have been taught in my life; strength, it says, strength, oh man be not weak. Aye are there no human weaknesses says man; there are, says the Upanishads, but will more weakness heal it, would you try to wash dirt with dirt? Will sin cure sin, weakness cure weakness? Strength, oh man strength says the Upanishads, stand up and be strong; aye, it is the only literature in the world where you find "nabhayet" "fearless" used again and again ; in no other scripture in the world is this adjective applied either to God or to man. "Nabhayet" "fearless" and to my mind rises from the past, the vision of the great Emperor of the West, Alexander the great, and I see, as it were in a picture, the great monarch standing on the banks of the Indus, talking to one of our Sanyásins in the forest, the old man he was talking to, perhaps naked, stark naked, sitting upon a block of stone and the Emperor astonished at his wisdom tempting him with gold and honor, to come over to Greece. And this man smiles at his gold, and smiles at his temptations, and refuses, and then the Emperor standing on his authority as an Emperor, says, "I will kill you, if you do not come," and the man bursts into a laugh, and he says "you never told such a falsehood in your life, as you tell just now. Who can kill me? Me you kill, Emperor of the material World! Never, for I am spirit unborn and undecaying, never was I born and never do I die, I am the Infinite, the Ominipresent the Omniscient, and you kill me, child that you are". Aye that is strength, that is strength. And the more I read the Upanishads my friends, my countrymen, the more I weep for you, for there in is the great practical application. Strength, strength for us. What we need is strength, who will give us strength? There are thousands to weaken us, stories we have learnt enough every one of our Purânas if you press it gives out stories enough to fill three-fourths of the libraries of the world. We have all that. Everything that can weaken us as a race we have had for the last thousand years. It seems as if for the last thousand years national life had this one end in view, viz., how to make us weaker and weaker, till we have become real earthworms, crawling at the feet of every one who dares to put his foot on us. Therefore my friends, as one of your blood, as one that lives and dies with you, let me tell you that we want strength, strength, and every time strength. And the Upanishads are the great mine of strength. Therein lies strength enough to invigorate the whole world; the whole world can be vivified, made strong, energised. It will call with trumpet voice upon the weak, the miserable and the down-trodden of all races, all creeds, and all sects, to stand on their feet and be free; freedom, physical freedom, mental freedom, and spiritual freedom are the watch word of the Upanishads. Aye, this is the one Scripture in the world, of all others, that does not talk of salvation, but of freedom. Be free from the bonds of nature, be free from weakness! And it shows to you that you have it already in you. That is another peculiarity. You are a Dvaitist, never mind, you have got to admit that by its very nature the soul is perfect; only by certain actions of the soul it has become contracted. Indeed the theory of contraction and expansion of Râmânuja is exactly what the modern evolutionists call Evolution and Atavism. The soul goes back becomes contracted as it were, its powers become potential, and by good deeds and good thoughts it expands again and reveals its natural perfection. With the Advaitist the one difference is that he admits evolution in nature and not in the soul. Suppose there is a screen, and there is a small hole in the screen. I am a man standing behind the screen and looking at this grand assembly; I can only see very few faces here. Suppose the hole to increase; as it increases more and more, all this assembly is revealed unto me, till the hole has become identified with the screen. There is nothing between you and me in this case; neither you changed nor I changed; all the change was in the screen. You were the same from first to last: only the screen changed. This is the Advaitist's position with regard to Evolution—evolution of nature and manifestation of the Self within. Not that the Self can by any means be made to contract. It is unchangeable, the Infinite One. It was covered, as it were, with a veil, the veil of Máyà and as this Máyà veil becomes thinner and thinner, the inborn, natural glory of the soul comes out and becomes more manifest. This is the one great doctrine which the world is waiting to learn from India. Whatever they may talk, however they may try to boast, they will find out day after day, that there can no more be a society without admitting this. Do you not find how everything is being revolutionised? Do you not see how it was the custom to take for granted that everything is wicked until it proves itself good? In education, in punishing criminals, in treating lunatics, in the treatment of common diseases even, that was the old law. What is the modern law? The modern law says, the body itself is healthy; it cures disease of its own nature. Medicine can at best help the storing up of the best in the body. What says it of criminals? It takes for granted that however low a criminal may be there is still the divinity within which does not change and we must treat criminals as such. They have changed all that. They call gaols penitentiaries. So with everything; consciously or unconsciously that divinity which is inside and outside India is expressing itself. And in your books is the explanation; they have got to take it. The treatment of man to man will be entirely revolutionised and these old old ideas of pointing to the weakness of mankind will have to go. They will have received their death-blow within this century. Now they may stand up and criticise us. I have been criticised from one end of the world to the other as one who preaches the diabolical idea that there is no sin. Very good. The descendants of these very men will bless me as the preacher of virtue, and not of sin. I am the preacher of virtue, not of sin. I glory in being the preacher of light and not of darkness.

The second great idea which the world is waiting to receive from our Upanishads is the solidarity of this universe. The old old lines of demarcation and differentiation are vanishing rapidly. Electricity and steam power are placing the different parts of the world in intercommunication with each other, and, as a result, we Hindus no more say that every country beyond our own land is peopled with demons and hobgoblins; nor do the people of Christian countries say that India is only peopled by cannibals and savages. We go out of our country, we find the same brother man with the same strong hand to help, with the same lips to say god-speed, and sometimes better than in the country in which we are born. They, when they come here, find the same brother-hood, the same cheers, the same god-speed. Well, our Upanishads say that the cause of all misery is ignorance; and that is perfectly true applied to every state of life, either social or spiritual. It is ignorance that makes us hate each other, it is ignorance of each other that we do not know and do not love each other. As soon as we come to know each other love comes; must come, for are we not one? Thus we find solidarity coming in spite of itself. Even in Politics and Sociology, problems that were only national twenty years ago can no more be solved on national grounds. They are assuming huge proportions, gigantic shapes. They can only be solved when looked at in the broader light of international grounds. International organisations, international combinations, international laws are the cry of the day. That shows the solidarity. In science everyday they are finding out that view of the matter. You speak of matter, the whole universe as one mass, one ocean of matter, in which you and I, the sun and the moon, and everything else, are but the names of different little whirlpools and nothing more. Mentally speaking it is one universal ocean of thought, in which you and I are similar little whirlpools, and as spirit it moveth not, it changeth not. It is the One Unchangeable, Unbroken, Homogeneous Atman. The cry for morality is coming also, and that is in our books. The explanation of morality the fountain of ethics, that also the world wants ; and that they will get. What do we want in India? If foreigners want these things we want them twenty times more. Because, in spite of the greatness of the Upanishads, in spite of our boasted ancestry of sages, compared to many other races I must tell you in plain words we are weak, very weak. First of all is our physical weakness. That physical weakness is the cause at least of one-third of our miseries. We are lazy ; we cannot work ; we cannot combine ; we do not love each other ; we are immensely selfish ; not three of us can come together without hating each other, without being jealous of each other. That is the state in which we are, hopelessly disorganized mobs, immensely selfish ; fighting each other for centuries, whether a certain mark is to be put this way or that way ; writing volumes and volumes upon such most momentous questions as whether the look of a man spoils my food or not ! This we have been doing for the last few centuries. We cannot expect anything more except what we are just now, of a race whose whole brain energy has been occupied in such wonderfully beautiful problems and researches ! And we are not ashamed. Aye sometimes we are ; but we cannot do what we think. Think we many things and never do, till parrot-like, thinking has become a habit, and never doing. What is the cause of that? Physical weakness. This weak brain is not able to do anything ; we must change that. Our young men must be strong, first of all. Religion will come afterwards. Be strong my young friends, that is my advice to you. You will be nearer to Heaven through foot-ball than through the study of the Gîtâ. Bold words are these. I have to say them. I love you. I know where the shoe pinches. I have gained a little experience. You will understand Gîtâ better with your biceps, your muscles a little stronger. You will understand the mighty genius and the mighty strength of Krishna better with a little of strong blood in you. You will understand the Upanishads better, and the glory of the Atman, when your body stands firm upon your feet and you feel yourselves as men. Thus we have to apply these to our needs. People get disgusted many times at my preaching Advaitism. I do not mean to preach Advaitism, or Dvaitism, or any ism in the world. The only ism that we require now is this wonderful idea of the soul—its eternal might, its eternal strength, its eternal purity, and its eternal perfection.

If I had a child I would from its very birth begin to tell it "Thou art the Pure One." You have read in one of the Purânas that beautiful story of Queen Madâlasa, how as soon as she has a child she puts her child with her own hands on the hammock, and how as the hammock swings to and fro, she begins to sing "thou art the Pure One, the Stainless, Sinless, the Mighty One, the Great One." Aye, there is much in that. Feel that you are great and you become great. What did I get as my experience all over the world, is the question. They may talk about sinners ; and if all Englishmen indeed believed that they were sinners, Englishmen would be no better than the Negroes in the middle of Africa. God bless them that they do not believe it. On the other had the Englishman believes he is born the lord of the world. He believes he is great and can do anything in the world, if he wants he can go to the sun or the moon, and that makes him great. If he had believed his priests that he is a poor little sinner, going to be barbecued through all eternity, he would not be the same Englishman that he is to day. So I find in every nation that, in spite of priests and superstition, the divine within lives and asserts itself. We have lost faith. Would you believe me, we have less faith than the Englishman and woman, a thousand times less faith! These are plain words, but I say it, I cannot help it. Don't you see how Englishmen and women, when they catch our ideas, become mad as it were, and although they are the ruling class, come to India to preach our own religion against the jeers and ridicule of their own countrymen? How many of you can do that; just think of that; and why cannot you do that? Is it that you do not know it? You know more than they, that is why it is; you are more wise than is good for you, that is your difficulty! Simply because your blood is only a pint of tar, your brain is sloughing, your body is weak! Change the body, it must be changed. Physical weakness is the cause and nothing else. You have talked of reforms, of ideals, and all these, for the last hundred years, and when it comes to practice, you are not to be found anywhere; till you have disgusted the whole world, and the very name of Reform is a thing of ridicule to the whole world! And what is the cause? Is it that you do not know? You know too much. The only cause is that you are weak, weak, weak, your body is weak, your mind is weak, you have no faith in yourselves! Centuries and centuries, a thousand years of crushing tyranny of castes, and kings, and foreigners, and your own people, have taken out all strength from you, my brethern! Like trodden down, and broken, back-boneless worms you are! Who will give us strength? Let me tell you, strength, strength, is what we want. And the first step in getting strength is to uphold the Upanishads, and believe that "I am the soul." "Me the sword cannot cut; no instruments pierce; me the fire cannot burn; me the air cannot dry; I am the Omnipotent, I am the Omniscient." So repeat these blessed saving words. Do not say we are weak, we can do anything and everything. What can we not do, every thing can be done by us; we have the same glorious soul in every one; let us believe in it. Have faith, as Nachiketa; at the time of his father's sacrifice, faith came unto Nachiketa; aye, I wish that faith would come unto each of you; and every one of you would stand up a gigantic intellect, a world-mover, a giant, an infinite God in every respect; that is what I want you to become. This is the strength that you get from the Upanishads, this is the faith that you will get, and this is there. Aye, but it was only for the Sanyâsin! Rahasya! The Upanishads were in the hands of the Sanyâsin; he went into the forest! Sankara was a little kind, and says even Grihasthas may study the Upanishads, it will do them good; it will not hurt them. But still the idea is that the Upanishads talked only of the forest. As I told you the other day the only commentary, the authoritative commentary of the Vedas, has been made once and for ever by Him who inspired the Vedas, by Krishna in the Gîtâ. There it is for every one, for every occupation of life. These conceptions of the Vedânta must come, must remain not only in the forest, they must not only go into the cave, but they must come to work out in the Bar, and the Bench, in the Pulpit, the cottage of the poor man, with the fishermen that are catching fish, and students that are studying. They call to every man, every woman, and child, whatever be their occupation, everywhere they must be; and what to fear! The ideals of the Upanishads! how can the fishermen and all these carry them out! The way has been shown. It is infinite; religion is infinite, none can go beyond; and whatever you do, that is very good for you. Even the least done brings marvellous results; therefore let every one do what little he can. If the fisherman thinks that he is the spirit he will be a better fisherman; if the student thinks he is the spirit, he will be a great student. If the lawyer thinks that he is the spirit, he will be a better lawyer, and so on, and the result will be that the castes will remain for ever. It is in the nature of society to form itself into groups; and what will go? These privileges! Caste is a natural order. I can perform one duty in social life, you another; you can govern a country, and I can mend a pair of old shoes, but that is no reason why you are greater than I, for can you mend my shoes? Can I govern the country? It is natural. I am clever in mending shoes you are clever in reading Vedas, but that is no reason why you should trample on my head; why if you commit murder will you only be praised, and if I steal an apple shall I be hanged! This will go. Caste is good. That is the only natural way of solving life. Men must form themselves into groups, you cannot get rid of that. Wherever you go there will be caste. But that does not mean that there will be these privileges. They will be knocked on the head. If you teach Vedānta to the fisherman, he will say, I am as good a man as you, I am a fisherman, you are a philosopher; never mind, I have the same God in me, as you have in you. And that is what we want, no privilege for any one, equal chances for every one; let every one be taught the Divine within, and every one will work out his own salvation. Liberty is the first condition of growth. It is wrong, a thousand times wrong, if any of you dares to say 'I will work out the salvation of this woman or child.' I am asked again and again what do you think of this widow question and what do you think of this woman question? Let me answer once for all, am I a widow that you ask me that nonsense! Am I a woman, that you ask me that question again and again? Who are you to solve women's problems and widows' problems? Are you the Lord God himself, ruling over every woman and every widow? Hands off. They will solve their own problems. Nonsense! Tyrants, attempting to think that you can do anything for any one! Hands off. The Divine will look after all. Who are you to assume that you know everything; how dare you think, oh blasphemers, that you have the right over God. For don't you know that every soul is the soul of God, oh, blasphemers! Mind your own Karma a load of Karma is there in you working. Oh ye blasphemers! Your nation may put you upon a pedestal, your society may cheer you up to the skies; fools may praise you; but He sleeps not, He will catch you, and the punishment will be sure, here or hereafter. Therefore look upon every man and woman and every one as God. You cannot help anyone; you can only serve; serve the children of the Lord, serve the Lord Himself, if you have the privilege. If the Lord grants that you can help any one of His children blessed you are; do not think too much of yourselves. Blessed you are that that privilege was given to you and others had it not. Hands off, therefore; none here requires your help. It is only worship. I see there are some poor, because it is of my salvation I will go and worship them: God is there; some here are miserable for your and my salvation, so that we may serve the Lord, coming in the shape of the diseased, coming in the shape of the lunatic, the leper, and the sinner. Bold are my words, and let me tell them for it is the greatest privilege in your or my life that we are allowed to serve the Lord in all these shapes. Give up the idea that by ruling some one, you can do any good to them. But you can do just as in the case of the plant; you can supply the growing seed with the materials for the making up of its body, bringing to it the earth, the water the air, that it wants. It will take all that it wants by its own nature, assimilate and grow by its own nature. Bring, all light into the world; light, bring light; let light come unto every one, let the task be not finished till every one has reached the Lord. Bring light to the poor, and bring more light to the rich, for they require it more than the poor; bring light to the ignorant, and more light to the educated, for the vanities of this education of our time are tremendous! Thus bring light to all and leave the rest unto the Lord, for in the words of the same Lord, "To work you have the right and not to the fruits thereof." Let not your work produce results for you, and at the same time may you never be without work. May He who taught such grand ideas to us, to our forefathers ages before, help us to get strength to carry into practice His commands.

"THE SAGES OF INDIA."

This was the subject of the third lecture of which the text follows:—

In speaking of the sages of India, my mind goes back to those periods of which history has no record, and tradition tries in vain to bring the secrets out of the gloom of the past. The sages of India have been almost innumerable for what has the Hindu nation been doing for thousands, of years except producing sages? I will take, therefore, the lives of a few of the most brilliant ones, the epoch-makers, and present my study of them before you. In the first place, we have to understand a little about our scriptures. Two ideals of truth are in our scriptures, the one is what we call the eternal, and the other not so authoritative, yet binding under particular circumstances, and times, and places. The eternal relations which deal with the nature of the soul, and of God, and the relations between souls and God, are embodied in what we call the Srutis, the Vedas. The next set of truths is what we call the Smritis, as embodied in the works of Manu, Yajnavalkya, and other writers, and also in the Puranas, down to the Tantras. This second class of books and teachings is subordinate to the Srutis, inasmuch as whenever anyone of these contradicts anything in the Srutis, the Srutis must prevail. This is the law. The idea is that the outline of the destiny and goal of man has been delineated in the Vedas the details having been left to be worked out in the Smritis and Puranas. As for general directions, the Srutis are enough; for spiritual life, nothing more can be said, nothing more can be known. All that is necessary has been known, all the advice that is necessary to lead the soul to perfection has been completed in the Srutis; the details alone were omitted and these the Smritis have supplied from time to time. Another peculiarity is that these Srutis have many sages as the recorders of the truths in them, mostly men some even women. Very little is known of their personalities, the dates of their birth, and so forth, but their best thoughts—their best discoveries, I should say—are preserved there, embodied in the sacred literature of our country, the Vedas. In the Smritis, on the other hand, personalities, are more in evidence. Startling, gigantic, impressive, world moving persons for the first time, as it were, stand before us, sometimes of more magnitude, even, than their teachings.

This is a peculiarity which we have to understand,—that our religion preaches an Impersonal Personal God. It preaches impersonal laws plus personality, but the very fountain-head of our religion is in the Srutis, the Vedas, which are perfectly impersonal, and the persons all appear in the Smritis and Purānas—the great Avatārs, incarnations of God, Prophets, and so forth. And this ought also to be observed, that except our religion, every other religion in the world depends upon the life or lives of some personal founder or founders. Christianity is built upon the life of Jesus Christ, Mohammedanism of Mohammed, Buddhism of Buddha, Jainism of the Jinas, and so on. It naturally follows that there must be in all these religions a good deal of fight about what they call the historical evidences of these great personalities. If at any time the historical evidences about the existence of these personages in ancient times become weak, the whole building of the religion tumbles down to the ground and is broken to pieces. We escaped this fate because our religion is not based upon persons but on principles. That you obey your religion is not because it came through the authority of a sage, no, not even of an incarnation. Krishna is not the authority of the Vedas, but the Vedas are the authority of Krishna himself. His glory is that he is the greatest preacher of the Vedas that ever existed. So as to the other incarnations ; so with all our sages. Our first principle is that all that is necessary for the perfection of man and for attaining unto freedom is there in the Vedas. You cannot find anything new. You cannot go beyond a perfect unity, which is the goal of all knowledge ; this has been already reached there, and it is impossible to go beyond the unity. Religious knowledge became complete when Tat twam asi was discovered, and that was in the Vedas. What remained was the guidance of people from time to time, according to different times and places, according to different circumstances and environments; people had to be guided along the old, old path, and for this these great teachers came, these great sages. Nothing can bear out more clearly this position than the celebrated saying of Sri Krishna in the Gita:—Yadā yadāhi dharmasya glānirbhavati Bhārata Abhyuttānam adharmasya tadātmanam srijāmyaham &c. &c. “Whenever virtue subsides and irreligion prevails I create myself for the protection of the good; for the destruction of all immorality I am coming from time to time.” This is the idea in India.

What follows? That on the one hand, there are these eternal principles which stand upon their own foundations, without depending on any reasoning even, much less on the authority of sages, however great of incarnations, however brilliant they may have been. We may remark that as this is the unique position in India, our claim is that the Vedānta only can be the universal religion, that it is already the existing universal religion in the world, because it teaches principles and not persons. No religion built upon a person can be taken up as a type by all the races of mankind. Even in one small city we find that so many hundreds of persons are taken up as types by the different minds in that one city. How is it possible that one person, as Mahommed, or Buddha, or Christ, can be taken up as the one type for the whole world? nay, that the whole of morality, and ethics, and spirituality, and religion, can be true only from the sanction of that one person, and one person alone? Now the Vedāntic religion does not require any such personal authority; its sanction is the eternal nature of man, its ethics are based upon the eternal spiritual solidarity of man, already existing, already attained, and not to be attained. On the other hand, from the very earliest times, our sages have been feeling conscious of this fact, that the vast majority of mankind require a person. They must have a Personal God in some form or other. The very Buddha who declared against the existence of a Personal God had not died fifty years before his disciples manufactured a Personal God out of him. This Personal God is necessary, and at the same time we know that instead of, and better than, vain imaginations of a Personal God, which in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred are unworthy of human worship, we have in this world, living and walking in our midst, living Gods now and then. These are more worthy of worship than any imaginary God, any creation of our imaginations, and idea of God which we can make. Sri Krishna is much greater than any idea of God you or I can make. Buddha is a much higher idea, a more living and idealised idea, than any ideal you or I can conceive in our minds, and therefore it is that they always command the worship of mankind, even to the exclusion of all imaginary deities. This our sages knew, and therefore left it open to all Indian people to worship such great personages, such incarnations. Nay, the greatest of these incarnations goes further.—Yadyadvibhūtimatsattvam śrīmadūrjitameva vā, Tattadevāvagachchha tvam mama tejomsa sambhavam. “Wherever there is an extraordinary spiritual power manifested by external man know that I am there; it is from me that that manifestation comes.” That leaves the door open for the Hindu to worship the incarnations of all the countries in the world. The Hindu can worship any sage and any saint from any country whatsoever, and as a fact we know that we go and worship many times in the churches of the Christians, and many, many times in the Mahommedan Mosques, and that is good. Why not? Ours, as I have said, is the universal religion. It is inclusive enough, it is broad enough to include all the ideals. All the ideals of religion that already exist in the world can be immediately included, and we can patiently wait for all the ideals that are to come in the future, to be taken in the same fashion, embraced in the infinite arms of the religion of the Vedānta.

This more or less, is our position with regard to the great sages, the incarnations of God. There are also secondary characters. We find the word Rishi again and again mentioned in the Vedas, and it has become a common word at the present time. The Rishi is the great authority. We have to understand that idea. The definition is that the Rishi is the Mantra drashtā, the seer of thought. What is the proof of religion?—this was asked in very ancient times. There is no proof in the senses, was the declaration. Yato vācho nivartante aprāpya manasā saha na tatra chakshurgachchhati na vāggachchhati &c. “From whence words reflect back with thought without reaching the goal. There the eyes cannot reach, neither can the mind, nor any of the organs.” That has been the declaration for ages and ages. Nature outside cannot give us any answer as to the existence of the soul, the existence of God, the eternal life, the goal of man, and all that. This mind is continually changing, always in a state of flux, it is finite, it is broken into pieces. What can this nature talk of the Infinite, the Unchangeable, the Unbroken, the Indivisible, the Eternal? It never can. And wherever mankind has striven in vain to get an answer from dull dead matter, history knows how disastrous the results have been. How comes, therefore, the knowledge which the Vedas declared? It comes through a Rishi. This knowledge is not in the senses, but is the senses, the be-all and the end-all of the human being. Who dares say that the senses are the all in all of man. Even in our lives, in the life of every one of us here, there come moments of calmness, perhaps, when we see before us the death of one we loved, when some shock comes to us, or when extreme blessedness comes to us ; many other occasions there are when the mind, as it were, becomes calm, feels for the moment its real nature ; a glimpse of the Infinite beyond, where words cannot reach, nor the mind go is revealed to us. This happens in ordinary life and has to be heightened, practised, perfected : men found out ages ago that the soul is not bound or limited by the senses, no not even by consciousness. We have to understand that this consciousness is only the name of one link in the infinite chain. Being is not identical with consciousness, but consciousness is only one part of Being. Beyond consciousness is where the bold search. Consciousness is bound by the senses. Beyond that, beyond the senses, men must go in order to arrive at truths of the spiritual world, and there are even now persons who succeed in going beyond the bounds of the senses. These are called Rishis, because they come face to face with spiritual truths. The proof therefore, of the Vedas is just the same as the proof of this table before me, pratyaksham, direct perception. This I see with the senses, and the truths of spirituality we also see in a super-conscious state of the human soul. This Rishi-state is not limited by time, or by place, or by sex, or by race. Vâtsyâyana boldly declares this Rishihood is the common property of the descendant of the sage, of the Aryan of the non-Aryan, of even the Mlechcha. This is the sage-ship of the Vedas, and we ought constantly to remember that ideal of religion in India, which I wish other nations of the world would also remember and learn, so that there might be less fight and less quarrel. Religion is not in books, nor in theories, nor in dogmas, nor in talking, not even in reasoning. It is being and becoming. Aye, my friends, until each one of you has become a Rishi, and come face to face with spiritual facts, religious life has not begun for you. Until the super-conscious opens for you, religion is mere talk, it is all but preparation. You are talking second hand, third hand, and here applies that beautiful saying of Buddha when he had a discussion with some Brahmins! They came discussing about the nature of Brahman and the great sage asked "Have you seen Brahman?" "No," said the Brahmin; "Or your father?" "No, neither he:" "Or your grandfather?" "I don't think even he saw Him." "My friend whom your father and grand father never saw, how do you discuss about such a person, and try to put down each other?" That is what the whole world is doing. Let us say in the language of the Vedānta Nāyamātma pravachanena labhyah na medhayà bahunà srutena "This Atman is not to be reached by too much talk, no, not even by the highest intellect, no, not even by the study of the Vedas themselves." Let us speak to all the nations of the world in the language of the Vedas:—Vain are your fights and your quarrels; have you seen God whom you want to preach? If you have not seen vain is your preaching, you do not know what you say and, if you have seen God, you will not quarrel, your face will shine. An ancient sage of the Upanishads sent his son out to learn about Brahman, and the child came back, and the father asked "what have you learnt"? The child replied he had learnt many sciences and the father said "that is nothing, go back." And the son went back, and when he returned again the father asked the same question, and the same number of sciences was the answer from the child. Once more he had to go back, and the next time he came, his whole face was shining, and his father stood up and declared "Aye, to-day, my child, your face shines like a knower of God." When you have known God your very face will be changed, your voice will be changed, your whole appearance will be changed. You will be a blessing to mankind ; none will be able to resist the Rishi. This is Rishihood, the ideal of our religion. The rest, all these talks, and reasonings, and philosophies, and dualisms, and monisms, even the Vedas themselves, are but preparations, secondary. The other is primary. The Vedas, Grammar, Astronomy, &c., all these are secondary ; that is supreme knowledge which makes us realise the Unchangeable One. Those who realised are the sages whom we find in the Vedas, and we understand how this Rishi is the name of a type, of a class, which every one of us, as true Hindus is expected to become at some period of our life, and becoming which, to the Hindu, means salvation. Not belief in doctrines, nor going to thousands of temples, nor bathing in all the rivers in the world, but becoming the Rishi, the Mantra dāshṭa, that is freedom, that is salvation.

Coming down to later times, there have been great world-moving sages, great incarnations, of whom there have been many, and according to Bhāghavata they also are infinite in number, of whom those that are worshipped most in India are Rāma and Krishna. Rāma, the ancient idol of the heroic ages, the embodiment of truth, of morality, the ideal son, the ideal husband, the ideal father, and above all the ideal king, this Rāma has been presented before us by the great sage Vālmiki. No language can be purer, none chaster, none more beautiful, and at the same time simpler than the language in which the great poet has depicted the life of Rāma. And what to speak of Sita? You may exhaust the literature of the world that is past, and I may assure you, will have to exhaust the literature of the world of the future, before finding another Sita. Sita is unique; that character was once depicted, and once for all. Rámas have been, perhaps, several, but Sitas never. She is the very type of the Indian woman as she should be, for all the Indian ideals of a perfected woman have got around that one life of Sita, and here she stands, these thousands of years commanding the worship of every man woman, or child, throughout the length and breadth of the land of Aryàvarta. There she will always be, glorious Sita, purer than purity itself, all patience, and all suffering. She who suffered that life of suffering without a murmur, she the ever chaste and ever pure wife, she the ideal of the people, the ideal of the gods, the great Sita, our national God she must always remain. And every one of us knows her too well to require much delineation. All our mythology may vanish, even our Vedas may depart, and our Sanskrit language may vanish for ever, but as long as there will be five Hindus living here, speaking the most vulgar patois, there will the story of Sita be present, mark my words. Sita has gone into the very vitals of our race. She is in the blood of every Hindu man and woman; we are all children of Sita. Any attempt to modernise our women, if it tries to take our women away from that ideal of Sita, is a failure. The women of India must grow and develop in the foot-prints of Sita, and that is the only way.

The next is He who is worshipped in various forms, The favorite ideal of men, as well as of women, the ideal of children, as well as of grown-up men. I mean He whom the writer of the Bhagavad Gîtâ was not content to call an incarnation but says "The other incarnations were but parts of the Lord. He, Krishna, was the Lord Himself." And it is not strange that such adjectives are applied to him when we marvel at the many-sidedness of his character. He was the most wonderful Sanyàsin, and the most wonderful householder in one, he had the most wonderful amount Rajas power, and was at the same time living in the midst of the most wonderful renunciation. Krishna can never be understood until you have studied the Gîtà, for he was the embodiment of his own teaching. Every one of these incarnations came as a living illustration of what they came to preach. Krishna, the preacher of the Gîtà, was all his life the embodiment of that song celestial; he was the great illustration of non-attachment. He gives up his throne, He the leader of India, at whose word kings come down from their thrones, does not wish to be a king. He is the simple Krishna, ever the same Krishna who played with the Gopis. Aye that most marvellous passage of his life the most difficult to understand, and which none ought to attempt to understand until he has become perfectly chaste and pure the most marvellous expansion of love, allegorised and expressed in that beautiful play at Brindàvan, which none can understand but he that has become mad with and drunk deep of the cup of love! Who can understand the throes of love of the Gopis—the very ideal of love, love that wants nothing, love that even does not care for heaven, love that does not care for anything in this world or the world to come? And here, my friends, through this love of the Gopis, has been found the only solution of the conflict between the Personal and the Impersonal God. We know how the Personal God is the highest point of human life; we know that it is philosophical to believe in an Impersonal God, immanent in the universe, of whom everything is a manifestation. At the same time our souls hanker after something concrete, something which we want to grasp, at whose feet we can pour our soul. The Personal God is therefore the highest conception of human nature. Yet reason stands aghast at such an idea. It is the same old, old question which you find discussed in the Brahma Sūtras, which you find Droupadi discussing with Yudhishtira in the forest,—if there is a Personal God, all merciful, all powerful, why is this hell of an earth here? Why did he create this? he must be a partial God. There was no solution, and the only solution that can be found is what you read about the love of the Gopis. They hated every adjective that was applied to Krishna; they did not care to know that he was the Lord of creation, they did not care to know that he was almighty, they did not care to know that he was omnipotent. The only thing they understood was that he was Infinite Love, that was all. The Gopis understood Krishna only as the Krishna of Brindavan. He, the leader of the hosts, the King of kings, to them was the shepherd, and the shepherd for ever. Na dhanam na janam na kavitam sundrim va jagadisa kāmāye mama janmajanmantśvara-bhavatāt bhaktirahaitukē tvayi. “I do not want wealth, nor many people, nor do I want learning; no not even do I want to go to heaven. Let me be born again and again, but Lord, grant me this, that I may have love for Thee, and that for love's sake.” A great land mark in the history of religion is here, the ideal of love for love's sake, work for work's sake, duty for duty's sake, and it for the first time fell from the lips of the greatest of incarnations, Krishna, and for the first time in the history of humanity, upon the soil of India. The religions of fear and of temptation were gone for ever, and in spite of the fear of hell, and temptation to enjoyment in heaven, came the grandest of ideals, love for love's sake duty for duty's sake, work for work's sake. And what a love! I have told you just now that it is very difficult to understand the love of the Gopis. There are not wanting fools, even in the midst of us, who cannot understand the marvellous significance of that most marvellous of all episodes. There are, let me repeat, impure fools, even born of our blood, who try to shrink from that as if from something impure. For them I have only to say, first make yourselves pure, and you must remember that he who tells the history of the love of the Gopis is none else but Suka Deva. The historian who records this love of the Gopis is one who was born pure, the eternally pure Suka, the son of Vyása. So long as there is selfishness in the heart, so long is love of God impossible ; it is nothing but shop-keeping I give you something, Oh Lord, you give me something. And, says the Lord, if you do not do this I will take good care of you when you die. I will roast you all the rest of your lives, perhaps, and so on. So long as such ideas are in the brain how can one understand the mad throes of the Gopis' love. Suratavardhanam Sokanāsanam svarita venunā sushtuchumbitam. Itararāga vismāranamurinām vitara vīranah tedharāmritam. "Oh for one kiss of those lips ; one who has been kissed by Thee, his thirst for Thee increases for ever, all sorrows vanish, and we forget love for everything else but for Thee and Thee alone." Aye ; forget first the love for gold, and name and fame, and for this little world of ours. Then, only then will you understand the love of the Gopis, too holy to be attempted without giving up everything, too sacred to be understood until the soul has become perfectly pure. People with ideas of sex, and of money, and of fame, bubbling up every minute in the heart daring to criticise and understand the love of the Gopis ! That is the very essence of the Krishna incarnation. Even the Gítá, the great philosophy itself, does not compare with that madness, for in the Gítá the disciple is taught slowly how to walk towards the goal, but here is the madness of enjoyment, the drunkenness of love, where disciples, and teachers, and teachings, and books, and all these things, have become one, even the ideas of fear, and God, and heaven. Everything has been thrown away. What remains is the madness of love. It is forgetfulness of everything, and the lover sees nothing in the world except that Krishna, and Krishna alone, when the face of every being becomes a Krishna, when his own face looks like Krishna, when his own soul has become tinged with Krishna colour. That was the great Krishna. Do not waste your time upon details. Take up the frame work, the essence of the life. There may be many historical discrepancies, there may be interpolations in the life of Krishna. All these things may be true, but at the same time, there must have been a basis, a foundation for this new and tremendous departure. Taking the life of any other sage or prophet, we find that that prophet is only the evolution of what had gone before him. We find that that prophet is only preaching the ideas that had been scattered about his own country, even in his own times. Great doubts may exist even as to whether that prophet existed or not. But here, I challenge any one to show whether these things, these ideals—work for work's sake, love for love's sake, duty for duty's sake—were not original ideas with Krishna, and, as such, there must have been some one with whom these ideas originated. They could not have been borrowed from anybody else, they were not floating about the atmosphere when Krishna was born. But the Lord Krishna was the first preacher of this; his disciple Vyása took it up and preached it unto mankind. This is the highest idea to picture. The highest thing we can get out of him is Gopí-Janavallabha, the shepherd of Brindávan. When that madness comes in your brain, when you understand the blessed Gopis, then you will understand what love is. When the whole world will vanish, when all other considerations will have died out, when you will become pure-hearted, with no other aim, not even the search after truth, then, and then alone, will rush before you the madness of that love, the strength and the power, of that infinite love which the Gopis had, that love for love's sake. That is the goal. When you have got that you have got everything.

To come down to the lower stratum, Krishna—the preacher of the Gītā. Aye, there is an attempt in India now which is like putting the cart before the horse. Many of our people think that Krishna as the lover of the Gopis is rather something uncanny, and the Europeans do not like it much. Dr. So-and-so does not like it. Certainly then, the Gopis have to go. In the Mahābhārata there is no mention of the Gopis except in one or two places. In the prayer of Draupadi there is mention of a Brindāvan life, and in the speech of S'isupāla there is again mention of this Brindāvan. From that ideal lover we come down to the lower stratum of Krishna the preacher of Gītā. Even there no better commentary has been written or can be written. The essence of the S'rutis, or of the Upanishads, is hard to be understood, seeing that there are so many commentators, each one trying to interpret in his own way. Then the Lord Himself comes, He who is the inspirer of the S'rutis, to show us the meaning of these as the preacher of Gītā, and to-day India wants nothing better, the world wants nothing better than that method of interpretation. It is a wonder that subsequent interpreters of the Scriptures, even commenting upon the Gītā, could not catch the meaning, could not catch the drift. For what do you find in the Gītā, and what even in modern commentators? One non-dualistic commentator takes up an

Panditairgnātva Sarvabhūtamāyam Harim &c., " Thus seeing the same Lord equally present everywhere the sage does not injure self with self, and thus reaches the highest goal." To give as it were a living example of this preaching, to make at least one part of it practical, the preacher himself returned in another form. This was Sākya-muni, the preacher to the poor and the miserable, who rejected even the language of the gods to speak in the language of the people, so that he might reach the hearts of the people, who gave up a throne to live with beggars, and the poor, and the downcast, who pressed the Pariah unto his breast like a second Rama. But the work had one great defect and for that we are suffering even to-day. No blame attaches to the Lord. He is pure and glorious, but unfortunately such high ideals could not be well assimilated by the different uncivilised and uncultured races of mankind who flocked within the fold of the Aryans. These races, with varieties of superstition and hideous worship, rushed within the fold of the Aryan and for a time appeared as if they had become civilised, but before a century had passed they brought out their snakes, their ghosts, and all the other things their ancestors used to worship, and thus the whole of India became one degraded mass of superstition. The earlier Buddhists, in their rage against the killing of animals, had denounced the sacrifices of the Vedas; and these sacrifices used to be held in every house. There was a fire burning, and that was all the paraphernalia of worship. These sacrifices were obliterated, and in their place came gorgeous temples, gorgeous ceremonies, and gorgeous priests, and all that you see in India in modern times. I smile when I read books, written by some modern people who ought to have known better, that Buddha was the destroyer of Brahminical idolatry. Little do they know that Buddhism created Brahminism and idolatry in India. There was a book written about a year or two ago by a Russian gentleman who claimed to have found out a very curious life of Jesus Christ, and in one part of the book he says that Christ went to the Temple of Jagannáth to study with the Brahmins, but became disgusted with their exclusiveness and their idols, and so he went to the Lamas of Thibet instead, became perfect, and went home. To any man who knows anything about Indian History that very line proves that the whole thing was a fraud, because the Temple of Jagannáth is an old Buddhistic Temple. We took this and others over and re-hinduised them. We shall have to do many things like that yet. At that time there was not one Brahmin in Jagannáth and yet we are told that Jesus Christ came to study with the Brahmins there. Thus says our great Russian archæologist. Thus in spite of the preaching of mercy unto animals, in spite of the sublime ethical religion, in spite of the hair-splitting discussions about the existence of a permanent soul, or the non-existence of a permanent soul, the whole building of Buddhism tumbled down piecemeal; and the ruin was simply hideous. I have neither the time nor the inclination to describe to you the hideousness that came in the wake of Buddhism. The most hideous ceremonies, the most horrible, the most obscene books that human hands ever wrote, or the human brain ever conceived, the most bestial forms that ever passed under the name of religion, have all been the creation of degraded Buddhism.

But India has to live, and the spirit of the Lord descended again. He who declared that "I will come whenever virtue subsides" came again, and this time the manifestation was in the South, and up rose that young Brahmin of whom it has been declared that at the age of 16 he had completed all his writings ; the marvellous boy Sankarachàrya arose. The writing of this boy of 16 are the wonders of the modern world, and so was the boy. He wanted to bring back the Indian world to its pristine purity, but think of the extent of the task before him. I have told you a few points about the state of things that existed in India. All these horrors that you are trying to reform are the outcome of that reign of degradation. The Tartars, and the Belluchis, and all the hideous races of mankind, came to India and became Buddhists, and assimilated with us, and brought their national customs, and the whole of our national life became a huge page of the most horrible and the most bestial customs. That was the inheritance which that boy got from the Buddhists and from that time to this the whole world in India has been a re-conquest of this Buddhistic degradation by the Vedànta. It is still going on it is not yet finished. Sankara came, a great philosopher, and showed that the real essence of Buddhism, and that of the Vedànta, are not very different, but the disciples did not understand the master, and had degraded themselves, denied the existence of the soul and of God, and had become atheists. That was what Sankara showed, and all the Buddhists, began to return to the old religion. But they had become accustomed to all these forms ; what could be done ?

Then came the brilliant Ràmànuja. Sankara, with his great intellect, I am afraid, had not as great a heart. Ràmànuja's heart was greater. He felt for the downtrodden, he sympathised with them. He took up the ceremonies, the accretions that had gathered, made them pure so far as could be, and instituted new ceremonies, new methods of worship, for the people who absolutely required these. At the same time he opened the door to the highest spiritual worship, from the Brahmin to the Pariah, That was

Ràmànuja's work. That work rolled on, invaded North, and was taken up by some great leaders there, but that was much later, during the Mohammedan rule, and the brightest of these prophets of modern times in the North was Chaitanya; you may mark one characteristic since the time of Ràmànuja,—the opening of the door of spirituality to everyone. That has been the watchword of all the prophets succeeding Ràmànuja, as it had been the watchword of all the prophets before Sankara. I do not know why Sankara should be represented as rather exclusive; I do not find anything in his writings which is exclusive. Like the declarations of the Lord Buddha this exclusiveness that has been attributed to Sankara's teachings is most possibly not due to his teachings but to the incapacity of his disciples. This one great Northern sage, Chaitanya, I will mention as the last and then finish. He represented the mad love of the Gopis. Himself a Brahmin, born of one of the most rationalistic families of the day, a professor of logic, fighting and gaining a word-victory—for this he had learnt from his childhood as the highest ideal of life—yet, through the mercy of some sage, the whole life of that man became changed, he gave up his fighting his quarrels, his professorship of logic, and became one of the greatest teachers of Bhakti the world has ever known,—mad Chaitanya. His Bhakti rolled over the whole land of Bengal, bringing solace to every one. His love knew no bounds. The saint or the sinner, the Hindu or the Mohammedan, the pure or the impure, the prostitute, the street-walker—all had a share in his love, all had a share in his mercy, and even to the present day, although greatly degenerated, as everything does degenerate, yet his church is the refuge of the poor, of the down-trodden, of the outcast, of the weak, of those who have been rejected by all society. But

I must remark for truth's sake that in the philosophic sects we find wonderful liberalism. There is not a man who follows Sankara who will say that all the different sects of India are really different. At the same time he was a stern upholder of exclusiveness as regards caste. But in every Vaishnavite preacher while we find a wonderful liberalism in their teaching on caste questions, we find exclusiveness as regards religious questions.

The one had a great head, the other a large heart, and the time was ripe for one to be born the embodiment of this head and heart, the time was ripe for one to be born who in one body would have the brilliant intellect of Sankara and the wonderfully expansive, infinite heart of Chaitanya, one who would see in every sect the same spirit working, the same God, as well as see God in every being, one whose heart would weep for the poor, for the weak, for the outcast, for the down-trodden, for every one in this world, inside India or outside India, and at the same time whose grand brilliant intellect would conceive of such noble thoughts as would harmonise all conflicting sects, not only in India but outside of India, and bring a marvellous harmony, the universal religion of head and heart into existence ; such a man was born, and I had the good fortune to sit under his feet for years. The time was ripe, it was necessary that such a man should be born, and he came, and the most wonderful part of it was that his life's work was just near a city which was full of western thoughts, which had run mad after these occidental ideas, a city which had become more Europeanised than any other city in India. There he was born, without any book learning whatsoever, with his great intellect never could he write his own name, but everybody, the most brilliant graduates of our university, found in him an intellectual giant. That was a strange man. It is a long, long story, and I have no time to tell anything about him to-night. I had better stop, only mentioning the great Sri Ràmakrishna, the fulfilment of the Indian sages, the sage for the time, one whose teaching is just now, in the present time, most beneficial. And mark the divine power working behind the man. The son of a poor priest, born in one of the wayside villages of Bengal unknown and unthought of, to-day is worshipped literally by thousands in Europe and America, and to-morrow will be worshipped by thousands more. Who knows the plans of the Lord? Now, my brothers, if you do not see the hand, the finger, of Providence it is because you are blind, born blind indeed. If time comes, and another opportunity, I will speak to you about him more fully, only let me say now that if I have told you in my life one word of truth it was his and his alone, and if I have told you many things which were not true, which were not correct, which were not beneficial to the human race, they were all mine, and on me is the responsibility.

THE WORK BEFORE US.

A great deal of interest is attached to the appended lecture delivered to the 'Triplecane Literary Society in that it was mainly through discussion with the members of this Society that the Swami's great power became known, leading to his being sent to America, to represent the Hindu Religion at Chicago. He Said,—

The problem of life is becoming deeper and broader every day as the world moves on. The watchword and the essence have been preached in the days of yore, when the Vedàntic truth was first discovered, the solidarity of all life. One atom in this universe cannot move without dragging the whole world on with it. There cannot be any forward progress without the whole world following in the wake, and it is becoming every day clearer that the solution of any problem can never be attained on racial, or national, or narrow grounds. Every idea has to become broad till it covers the whole of this world, every aspiration must go on increasing till it has engulfed the whole of humanity, nay, the whole of life, within its scope. And, as such, if I may be permitted to say so, our country for the last few centuries has not been what she was in the past. We find that one of the causes which led to this degeneration was the narrowing of our view, the narrowing of the scope of our actions. Two curious things there have been. Sprung of the same race, but placed in different circumstances and environments, working out the problems of life each in his own particular way, we find the ancient Hindu and the ancient Greek. The Indian Aryan with his vision towards the North, bound by the snow caps of the Himalayas with fresh water rivers like rolling oceans, surrounding him in the plains, with eternal forests which, to him seemed to be the end of the world, went inside; given the natural instinct, the superfine brain of the Aryan, with this sublime scenery surrounding him, the natural result was that he became introspective. Analysis of his own mind was the great theme of the Indo-Aryan. With the Greek, on the other hand, arriving at a part of the earth which was more beautiful than sublime,—the beautiful inlands of the Grecian Archipelago,—nature all around him generous yet simple, his mind went outside. It wanted to analyse the external world. And, as a result we find that from India have sprung all the analytical sciences, and from Greece all sciences of generalisation. The Hindu mind went on in its own direction and produced the most marvellous results. There is no comparison, even at the present day, with the logical capacity of the Hindus, with the tremendous power which the Indian brain still possesses, and we all know that our boys, in competition with the boys of any other country are remarkably successful. At the same time, when the national vigour went, perhaps one or two centuries before the Mohammedan conquest of India, this national faculty became so much exaggerated that it degraded itself, and we find some of this degradation in everything in India, in art, in music, in sciences. No more was there that broad conception of art, no more the symmetry of form and sublimity of conception, but the general, attempt at the ornate and florid style had arisen. The originality of the race seemed to have been lost. In music no more the soul-stirring phrases of the ancient Sanskrit music, no more each note stands, as it were, on its own feet, and produces marvellous harmony, but each note has lost its individuality. The whole music is a jumble of notes, a confused mass of curves. That is the sign of degradation in music. So, if you analyse all your idealistic conceptions, you will find the same attempt at ornate figures, and loss of originality. And even into religion, your special field, came the most horrible degradations. What can you expect of a race which for hundreds of years has been busy in discussing such momentous problems as whether we should drink a glass of water with the right hand or the left? What more degradation can there be than that the greatest minds of a country have been for several hundreds of years, discussing about the kitchen whether I touch you, or you touch me, and what is the penance for this touching? The themes of the Vedānta, the most glorious, the sublimest conceptions of God and soul ever preached on earth, were half lost, buried in the forests, preserved by a few Sanyāsins while the rest of the nation discussed the momentous questions of touching each other, and dress and food. The Mahommedan conquest gave us many of the good things which they had to teach us, no doubt ; even the lowest man in the world can teach something to the highest. At the same time they could not bring vigour into the race, till, for good or evil the English conquest of India took place. Of course every conquest is bad for conquest is an evil, foreign government is an evil, but even through evil comes good sometimes, and the great good of this English conquest is this. England, and the whole of Europe has to thank Greece for its civilisation. It is Greece that speaks through everything in Europe. Every building, every piece of furniture has the impress of Greece upon it ; their science and their art are Grecian alone. To-day the ancient Greek is meeting the ancient Hindu on the soil of India. Thus, slowly and silently, their heaven has come, the broadening out, the life-giving, and the revivalist movement that we see all round us has been worked out by all these forces together. A broader and more generous conception of life is before us, and, although at first we have been deluded a little and wanted to narrow things down, we are finding out to-day that these generous impulses, these broader conceptions of life, are the logical conceptions of what is in our ancient books. They are the carrying out to the rigorously logical effect of the primary conceptions of our own ancestors ; that to become broad, to go out, to amalgamate, to universalise, is the end of our aims. And all time we have been making ourselves smaller and smaller, desiccating ourselves, contrary to the plans laid down in our scriptures. Several dangers are in the way and one is that of the extreme conception that we are the people in the world. With all my love for India, and with all my patriotism, and veneration for the ancients, I cannot but think that we have to learn many things from the world. We must be always ready to sit at the feet of all, to learn great lessons, for, mark you, every one can teach us great lessons. Says our great law-giver, Manu : "Receive some good knowledge even from the low born and from the man of lowest birth, learn by service the road to heaven." We, therefore, as true children of Manu, must obey his commands, and be ready to learn the lessons of this life, or the life hereafter, from any one who can teach us. At the same time we must not forget that we have also to teach a great lesson to the world. We cannot do without the world outside India; it was our foolishness that we thought we could, and we have paid the penalty by about a thousand years of slavery. That we did not go out to compare ourselves with other nations, did not mark the workings that have been all around us, has been the one great cause of this degradation of the Indian mind. we have paid the penalty ; let us do it no more. All such foolish ideas that Indians must not go out of India are childish. They must be knocked on the head ; the more you go out and travel among the nations of the world, the better for you and for your country. If you had done that for hundreds of years past you would not be here to-day, at the feet of every nation that wants to rule India. The first manifest effect of life is expansion, you must expand if you want to live. The moment you have ceased to expand death is upon you, danger is ahead. I went to America and Europe, to which you so kindly allude; I had to, because that is the first sign of the revival of national life, expansion. This national reviving life, expanding inside, threw me off, and thousands will be thrown off in that way. Mark my words, it has to come, if this nation lives at all. This expansion, therefore, is the greatest of signs of the revival of national life, and through this expansion our offering to the general mass of human knowledge, our part of the general upheaval of the world, is going out to the external world. Again, this is not a new thing. Those of you who think that the Hindus have been always confined within the four walls of their country through all ages are entirely mistaken; you have not studied the old books, you have not studied the history of the race aright. Each nation must give in order to live. When you give life you will have life; when you receive you must pay for it by giving to all others; that we have been living for so many thousands of years is a fact that stares us in the face, and the solution of that fact is that we have been always giving to the outside world, whatever the ignorant may think. But the gift of India is the gift of religion, and philosophy; and wisdom, and spirituality, and religion does not want cohorts to march before its path and clear its way. Wisdom and philosophy do not want to be carried on torrents of blood. Wisdom and philosophy do not march upon bloody human bodies, do not march with violence, but come on the wings of peace and love, and that has always been so. Therefore we had to give. It has always been so. I was asked by a young lady in London "What have you Hindus done? You never even conquered a single nation." That is true to the Englishman, the brave, the heroic, the Kshatriya—conquest is the greatest glory that one man can have over another. That is true from their point of view but from ours it is quite the opposite. If I ask myself what has been the cause of India's greatness, I answer, "The cause is that we have never conquered." That is our glory. You are hearing every day, and some time I am sorry to say from men who ought to know better, denunciations of our religion, because it is not a conquering religion. To my mind that is the argument which proves, that our religion is truer than any other religion. It never conquered, it never shed blood, its mouth always shed words of blessing, of peace, words of love, and sympathy with all. It is here, and here alone, that the ideals of toleration were first preached; and it is here and here alone that toleration and sympathy have become practical. It is theoretical in every other country; it is here, and here alone, that the Hindu builds mosques for the Mahommedans and churches for the Christians. So, gentlemen, our message has gone out to the world many a time, but slowly, silently, unperceived. It is on a par with everything in India. The one characteristic of Indian thought is its silence, its calmness. At the same time the tremendous power that is behind it is never expressed by violence. It is always, the silent mesmerism of Indian thought. If a foreigner takes up our literature, at first it is disgusting to him; there is not the same stir, perhaps, the same amount of go, that rouses him instantly. Compare the tragedies of Europe with our tragedies. The one is full of action, that rouses you for the moment, but when it is over there comes the reaction, and everything is gone, washed off your brains, as it were. Indian tragedies are like the mesmerist's power, quiet, silent, but, as you go on studying them, they are upon you; you cannot move; you are bound; and whoever has dared to touch our literature has felt the bondage and is bound for ever.

Like the gentle dew that falls unseen and unheard, and yet brings into blossom the fairest of roses, so has been the contribution of India to the thought of the world. Silent, unperceived, yet omnipotent in its effect, it has revolutionised the thought of the world, yet nobody knows when it did. It was once remarked to me "how difficult it is to ascertain the name of any writer in India," to which I replied, "That is the Indian idea." They are not like modern writers who have stolen 90 per cent of their ideas from other writers, and 10 per cent are their own, and who take care to write a preface in which they say, 'For these ideas I am responsible.'

The great master minds, producing momentous results in the hearts of mankind, were content to write their books without even putting their names to them to throw the book on society, and to die quietly. Who knows the writers of our philosophy, who knows the writers of the Puranas? They all passed under the generic name of Vyása, and Kapila, and so on. They have been true children of Sri Krishna. They have been followers of the Gítà ; they practically carried out the great mandate "to work you have the right, but not to the fruits thereof."

Thus, gentlemen, India is working upon the world but one condition is necessary. Thoughts, like merchandise, can only run through channels made by somebody. Roads have to be made before even thought can travel from one place to another, and, whenever in the history of the world a great conquering nation has arisen linking the different parts of the world together, then has poured through these channels the thought of India, and entered into the veins of every race. Before even the Buddhists were born, there are evidences accumulating every day that Indian thought penetrated the world. Vedànta, before Buddhism, had penetrated into China, into Persia, and the Islands of the Eastern Archipelago. Again, when the mighty mind of the Greek had linked the different parts of the Eastern world together, there came Indian thought ; and Christianity with all its boasted civilisation, is a collection of little bits from the Indian mind. Ours is the religio-

of which Buddhism, with all its greatness, is the rebel child, and Christianity the very patchy imitation. One of these cycles has again arrived. There is the tremendous power of England which has linked the different parts of the world together. English roads no more are content like Roman roads to run over lands, but they have ploughed the deep in everyone of its parts. From ocean to ocean run the roads of England. Every part of the world has been linked to every other part, and electricity plays a most marvellous part as a new messenger. Under all these circumstances we find again India reviving and ready to give her own quota to the progress and civilisation of the world. That I have been forced, as it were, by nature, to go over to America and preach to England is the result. For every one of us ought to have expected that the time had arrived. Everything looks propitious, and Indian thought, philosophical and spiritual, must once more go over and conquer the world. The problem before us, therefore, is assuming proportions every day. It is not only that we must revive our own country ; that is a small matter. I am an imaginative man, and my idea is the conquest of the whole world by the Hindu race.

There have been great conquering races in the world. We also have been great conquerors. The story of our conquest has been described by that great Emperor of India, Asoka, as the conquest of religion and of spirituality. Once more the world must be conquered by India. This is the dream of my life, and I wish that each one of you who hear me to-day should have the same dream in your minds, and stop not till you have realised the dream. They will tell you every day that we had better look to our own homes first, then go to work outside. But I will tell you in plain language that you work best when you work for others. The best work that you ever did for yourselves was when you worked for others, trying to disseminate your ideas in foreign languages, beyond the seas, and this very meeting is proof how the attempt to enlighten other countries with your thoughts is helping your own country. One fourth of the effect that has been produced in this country by my going to England and America would not have been brought about had I confined my ideas only to India. This is the great ideal before us, and every one must be ready for it,—the conquest of the whole world by India—nothing less than that, and we must all get ready for it, strain every nerve for it. Let them come and flood the land with their armies, never mind. Up, India, and conquer the world with your spirituality! Aye, as has been declared on this soil first love must conquer hatred, hatred cannot conquer itself. Materialism and all its miseries can never be conquered by materialism. Armies when they attempt to conquer armies only multiply and make brutes of humanity. Spirituality must conquer the West. Slowly they are finding it out that what they want is spirituality to preserve them as nations. They are waiting for it, they are eager for it. Where is the supply to come from? Where are the men ready to go out to every country in the world with the messages of the great sages of India? Where are the men who are ready to sacrifice everything so that this message shall reach every corner of the world? Such heroic souls are wanted to help the spread of truth. Such heroic workers are wanted to go abroad and help to disseminate the great truths of the Vedānta. The world wants it; without it the world will be destroyed. The whole of the western world is on a volcano which may burst to-morrow. They have searched every corner of the world and have found no respite. They have drunk deep of the cup of pleasure and found it vanity. Now is the time to work that India's spiritual ideas may penetrate deep into the West. Therefore, you young men of Madras, I specially ask you to remember this. We must go out, we must conquer the world through our spirituality and philosophy. There is no other alternative, we must do it or die. The only condition of national life, once more vigorous national life, is the conquest of the world by Indian thought.

At the same time we must not forget that what I mean by the conquest of the world by spiritual thought is the sending of the life-giving principles, not the hundreds of superstitions that we have been hugging to our breasts for centuries. These have to be weeded out, even on this soil, and thrown aside, so that they may die for ever. These are the causes of the degradation of the race, and will lead to softening of the brain. That brain which cannot think of higher and nobler thoughts which has lost all power of originality, which has lost all vigour, that brain which is always poisoning itself with all sorts of little superstitions passing under the name of religion, we must beware of. In our sight here in India, there are several dangers. Of these the two, Scylla and Charybdis, rank materialism and its rebound, arrant superstition, must be avoided. There is the man to-day who after drinking the cup of Western wisdom, thinks that he knows everything. He laughs at the ancient sages. All Hindu thought to him is arrant trash, philosophy mere child's prattle, and religion the superstition of fools. On the other hand, there is the man, educated, but a sort of monomaniac, who runs to the other extreme; he wants to explain the omen of this and that. He has philosophical and metaphysical, and all kinds of most puerile explanations for the superstitions that belong to his peculiar race, or his peculiar gods, or his peculiar village. Every little village superstition is to him a mandate of the Vedas, and upon the carrying out of these, according to him, depends the national life. You must beware of these. I would rather see everyone of you rank atheists than superstitious fools, for the atheist is alive: you can make something out of him; he is not dead. But if superstition enters, the brain is gone, the brain is softened, degradation has seized upon the life. Avoid these two. Brave, bold men, these are what we want. What we want is vigour in the blood, strength in the nerves, iron muscles, and nerves of steel, no softening namby-pamby ideas. Avoid these. Avoid all mystery. There is no mystery in religion. Is there any mystery in the Vedānta, or in the Vedas or in the Samhitas, or in the Puranas? What secret societies did the sages of yore establish to preach their religion? What sleight of hand tricks are there recorded as used by them to bring their grand truths to humanity? Mystery-mongering and superstition is always a sign of weakness, this is always a sign of degradation and of death. Therefore beware of it, be strong, stand on your feet. Great things are there, most marvellous things. We may call them supernatural things so far as our ideas of nature go, but not one of these things is a mystery. It was never preached on this soil that the truths of religion were mysteries or that they were the property of secret societies sitting on snowcaps in the Himalayas. I have been in the Himalayas. You have not been. It is several hundreds of miles from your homes. I am a Sanyāsin, and I have been for the last fourteen years on my feet. These do not exist anywhere. Do not run after these superstitions. Better for you and for the race that you become rank atheists, because you would at least have strength, but this is degradation and death. Shame on humanity that strong men should spend their time on these superstitions, spend all their time in inventing legories, to explain the most rotten superstitions of the world. Be bold ; do not try to explain everything. The fact is we have many superstitions, many a bad spot, and a bad sore on our body—these have to be excised, cut off, and destroyed—but these do not destroy our religion, our national life, our spirituality. Every principle of religion is safe and the sooner these black spots are purged away the better the principles will shine, the more gloriously stick to them.

You hear of claims made by every one of the different religions as being the universal religion of the world. Let me tell you in the first place that perhaps there never will be such a thing, but if there is a religion which can lay that claim, it is only ours and none else, because every other religion depends on some person or persons. All the other religions have been built round the life of what they think historical man, and what they think the strength of the religion is really the weakness, for disprove the history of the man and the whole building tumbles to the ground. Half the lives of these great founders of religions have been broken into pieces, and the other half doubted very seriously. As such every truth that had its only foundation in their words vanishes into air again. But the truths of our religion, although we have persons by the score do not depend on them. The glory of Krishna is not that he was Krishna, but that he was that great teacher of Vedānta. If he had not been, his name would have died out of India as the name of Buddha has. Thus our allegiance is to the principles always and not to the persons. Persons are but the embodiments, the illustrations of the principles. If the principles are there the persons will come by the thousands and millions. If the principle is safe persons and Buddhas by hundreds and thousands will be born. But if the principle is lost and forgotten and the whole of national life tries to cling round a so-called historical person, woe unto that religion, danger unto that religion. Ours is the only religion, therefore, that does not depend on a person or persons ; it is based upon principles. At the same time, there is room for millions of persons. There is ample ground for introducing persons, but each one of them must be an illustration of the principles. We must not forget that. These principles of our religion are all safe, and it should be the life work of every one of us to keep them safe to keep them free from the accumulating dirt and dust of ages ; it is strange that in spite of the degradation that seized upon the race again and again, these principles of the Vedânta were never tarnished. No one, however wicked, ever dared to throw dirt upon them. Our scriptures are the best preserved scriptures in the world. Compared to other books there have been no interpolations, no text torturing, no destroying of the essence of the thought. It is there just as it was in the first place, directing the human mind towards the ideal, the goal. You find that these texts have been commented upon by different commentators, preached by great teachers, and sects founded upon them, and you find that in these books of the Vedas there are various ideas apparently contradictory. There are certain texts which are entirely dualistic, others are entirely monistic. The dualistic commentator, knowing no better, wishes to knock the monistic texts on the head. Preachers and priests want to explain them in the dualistic meaning. The monistic commentator serves the dualistic texts in a similar fashion. Now this is not the fault of the Vedas. It is foolish to attempt to prove that the whole of the Vedas are dualistic. It is equally foolish to attempt to prove that the whole of the Vedas are non-dualistic. They are dualistic and non-dualistic both. We understand it better to-day in the light of newer ideas. These are but several conceptions leading to the final conclusion and all these conceptions are necessary for the evolution of the mind, and therefore the Vedas preach them. In mercy to the human race the Vedas show the various steps to the higher goal. Not that they are contradictory, vain words used by the Vedas to delude children; they are necessary, not only for children but for many a grown-up man. So long as we have a body and so long as we are deluded by the idea of the identity of the body, so long as we have five senses and see the external world, we have to use a personal God. For all these ideas, as the great Ràmánuja has proved, about God and nature and the individualised soul, you must take if you take the one. You cannot avoid it. Therefore as long as you see the external world, to avoid a Personal God, and a personal soul, is arrant lunacy. But there may be times in the lives of sages when the human mind transcends as it were its own limitations, when man goes even beyond nature, even beyond where the Smriti declared when it quotes "From whence the words fall back with the mind without reaching the place. There the eyes cannot reach, nor the ears, we cannot say that we know it, we cannot say that we will know it." Even there the human soul transcends all limitations, and then and then alone, flashes into the human soul the conception of Monism that I and the whole universe are one, that I and the Brahman are one. And this conclusion you will find has not only been reached through knowledge and philosophy, but parts of it through the power of love. You read in the Bhagavad Gîtâ when Krishna disappeared and the Gopis bewailed his disappearance, at last the thought of Krishna became so prominent in their minds that each one forgot her own body and thought she was Krishna and they began to hang things on themselves and to play in his light. We understand therefore that this identity comes even through love. There was an ancient Persian Sûfi poet and one of his poems says—"I came to the beloved and behold the door was closed; I knocked at the door and from inside a voice came 'Who is there?' I replied 'I am.' The door did not open. A second time I came and knocked at the door, and the same voice asked, 'who is there?' 'I am so and so.' The door did not open. A third time I came and the same voice asked 'Who is there?' 'I and thou, my love' and the door opened." These are, therefore, so many stages, and we need not quarrel about them, even if there have been quarrels among the ancient commentators whom all of us ought to revere, for there is no limitation to knowledge, there is no omniscience exclusively the property of any one, in ancient or modern times. If there have been sages and Rishis in the past, be sure that there will be now. If there have been Vyâsas and Vâlmikis and Sankarâcharyas in ancient times, why may not each one of you become a Sankarâchârya. This is another point of our religion you must always remember, that in all the other scriptures inspiration is quoted as their authority, but this inspiration is limited to one or two or very few persons, and through them the truth came to the masses and we have all to obey them. Truth came to Jesus of Nazareth and we must all obey him—we don't know any thing more. And the truth came to the Rishis of India—the mantra-drashtâs, the seers of thought—not talkers, not book-swallowers, not scholars, not philologists, but seers of thought. "The Self is not to be reached by too much talking, not even by the highest intellects, not even by the study of the Scriptures." The Scriptures themselves say so. Do you find in any other Scriptures such a bold assertion as that—not even by the study of the Vedas will you reach the Atman? You must open your heart. Religion is not going to church, or putting marks on the forehead, or dressing in a peculiar fashion; you may paint yourselves all the colors of the rainbow, but if the heart has not been opened, if you have not realised God it is all vain. If one has the color of the heart he does not wait for any external color. That is the only religious realisation. We must not forget that colors and all these things are good so far as they help, so far they are all welcome but they are apt to degenerate, and instead of helping they, retard; and a man identifies religion with externalities. Going to the temple becomes tantamount to spiritual life. Giving something to a priest becomes tantamount to religious life. These are dangerous, and pernicious, and should be checked. Our scriptures declare again and again that even the knowledge of the external senses is not religion. That is religion which makes us realise the Unchangeable One, and that is religion for every one. He who realises transcendental truth, he who realises the Atman in his own nature, he who comes face to face with God, sees God alone in everything, has become a Rishi. It may have been thousands of years ago, it may be thousands of years to come, but he is the Rishi. And there is no religious life for you until you have become a Rishi. Then alone Religion begins for you, now is only the preparation. Then religion dawns upon you, now you are only undergoing intellectual gymnastic and physical tortures. We must therefore remember that our religion lays down distinctly and clearly that every one who wants salvation must pass through the stage of Rishihood—must become a mantra drashta, must see God. That is salvation. And therefore, if that is the law laid down by our scriptures, it becomes easy to look into the scripture with our own eyes, understand the meaning for ourselves, to analyse just what we want, and to understand the truth for ourselves. This is what has to be done. At the same time we must pay all reverence to the ancient sages for their work. They were great, these ancients, but we want to be greater. They did great work in the past, but we must do greater work than they. They had hundreds of Rishis in ancient India. We will have millions—we are going to have, and the sooner every one of you believes in this, the better for India, and the better for the world. Whatever you believe that you will be. If you believe yourselves to be bold, bold you will be. If you believe yourselves to be sages, sages you will be to-morrow. There is nothing to obstruct you. For if there is one common doctrine that runs through all our apparently contradictory sects, it is that all glory, power, and purity are within the soul already ; only, according to Ràmànuja, it contracts and expands at times, and according to Sankara it is a mere delusion. Never mind these differences. All admit the truth that the power is there—potential or manifest it is there—and the sooner you believe that the better for you. All power is within you ; you can do everything and anything. Believe in that, do not believe that you are weak ; do not believe that you are half crazy lunatics, as most of us do now-a-days. But you can do everything and anything without even the guidance of any one. All power is there. Stand up and express the Divinity that is within you.

THE FUTURE OF INDIA.

The last lecture in Madras was given in a large tent in which over four thousand people were accommodated. The swami said:—

This is the ancient land, where wisdom made its home before it went into any other country, the same India whose influx of spirituality is represented, on the material plane; by rolling rivers like oceans, where the eternal Himalayas, rising tier after tier, with their snowcaps, as it were, looking into the very mysteries of heaven. Here is the same India whose soil has been trodden by the feet of the greatest sages that ever lived. Here first arose inquiries into the nature of man, and into the internal world. Here first arose the doctrines of immortality of the soul, existence of a supervising God, an immanent God in nature and in man, and here the highest ideals of religion and philosophy have attained their culminating points. This is the land from whence, like tidal waves, spirituality and philosophy have again and again marched out and deluged the world, and this is the land from whence, once more such tides must proceed in order to bring life and vigour into the decaying races of mankind. It is the same India which has withstood the shocks of centuries, of hundreds of foreign invasions, of hundreds of upheavals of manners and customs. It is the same land which stands firmer than any rock in the world with its undying vigour, and indestructible life. Its life is of the same nature as the teaching about soul, without beginning and without end, immortal, and we are the children of such a country. Children of India, I am here to speak to you to-day about some practical things, and my object in reminding you about the glories of the past is simply this. Many times have I been told that looking into the past only degenerates and leads to nothing, let us look to the future. That is true. But out of the past is built the future. Look back, therefore, as far as you can, drink deep of the eternal fountains that are behind, and after that, look forward, march forward, and make India brighter, greater, much higher, than she ever was. Our ancestors were great. We must first know that. We must learn the elements of our being, the blood that courses in our veins, we must have faith in that blood, and in what it did in the past, and out of that faith, and consciousness of past greatness, we must build an India yet greater than what she has been. There have been periods of decay and degradation. I do not attach much importance to that; we all know that; that period has been necessary. The mighty tree produces beautiful ripe fruit. That fruit is put in the ground, it decays, and rots, and out of that decay spring the root, and the future tree, perhaps mightier than the first one. This period of decay through which we have passed was necessary. Out of this decay is coming the India of the future; it is already sprouting, its first leaves are already out, and a mighty gigantic tree, the Urdhwamūlam is here, already beginning to appear, and it is about that I am going to speak to you. The problems in India are more complicated, more momentous, than the problems in any other country. Race, Religion, Language, Government—all these together make a nation. The elements which compose the nations of the world are indeed very few, taking race after race, compared to this country. Here have been the Aryan, the Dravidian, the Tartar, the Turk, the Moghul, the European, all the nations of the world, as it were, pouring their blood into this land. Of languages the most wonderful conglomeration is here, of manners and customs there is more difference between two Indian races than between the European and the Eastern races. The one common ground that we have is our sacred traditions, our religion and upon that we shall have to build. In Europe political ideas form the national unity. In Asia religious ideas form the national unity. Unity in religion, therefore, is absolutely necessary as the first condition of the future of India. There must be the recognition of one religion throughout the length and breadth of this land. What do I mean by one religion? Not in the sense of one religion among the Christians, or the Mahomedans, or the Budhists, but we know that our religion has certain common grounds, common to all our sects, however varying their conclusions may be. Yet there are certain common grounds, and, within the limitation, this religion of ours admits of a marvellous variation, an infinitive amount of liberty to think and live our own lives. We all know that, that is, those of us who have thought; and what we want is to bring out these life-giving common principles of our religion, to let every man, woman, and child, throughout the length and breadth of this country, understand them, know them, and try to bring them out in their lives. This is the first step, therefore, that is to be taken. We see how in Asia, and especially in India, race difficulties, linguistic difficulties, social difficulties, national difficulties all melt away before this unifying power of religion. We know that to the Indian mind there is nothing higher than that of religious ideals, that this is the key-note of Indian life, and we can only work in the line of least resistance. Not only is it true that the ideal of religion is the highest ideal; in the case of India it is the only possible ideal of work; work in any other line, without first strengthening this, would be disastrous. Therefore the first plank in the making of a future India, the first step that is to be hewn out of that rock of ages, is this unifying of religion. We have to be taught that Hindus, Dualists, Qualified Monists, or Monists, or any other sect, Saivites, Vaishnavites, Pausupatis, all the various denominations, have certain common ideas behind, that the time has come when, for the well-being of ourselves, or the well-being of our race, we must give up our differences and quarrels. Be sure they are wrong entirely, that they are condemned by our scriptures, forbidden by our forefathers, and that those great men from whom we claim our descent, whose blood is in our veins, look down with contempt on their children quarrelling about very minute differences. With this all other improvements will come. When the life-blood is strong and pure no disease germ can live in that body. Our life-blood is that spirituality. If it flows clear, if it flows strong, and pure, and vigorous, all is well. Political, social, any other material defects even the poverty of the land, will be all cured if that blood is pure. For if the disease germ be thrown out, nothing will be able to enter into the blood. To take a simile from modern medicine, we know that there must be two causes to produce a disease, some poison germ outside, and the state of the body. Until the body is in a state to admit the germs, until the body is degraded to a lower vitality, so that the germs may enter and thrive, and multiply, there is no power in any germ in the world to produce a disease in any body. In fact, millions of germs are continually passing through everyone's body; but so long as it is vigorous it never is conscious of them. It is only when the body is weak that these germs take possession of the body and produce disease. Just so with the national life. It is when the national body is weak that all sorts of disease germs in the political state of the race, or, in its social state, or in any educational, intellectual state crowd into the system and produce disease. To remedy it therefore, we must go to the root of this disease, and cleanse the blood of all impurities. The one tendency will be to strengthen the man, to make the blood pure, the body vigorous, so that it will be able to resist and throw out all external poisons, and we have seen that our vigour our strength, nay, our national life, is in our religion. I am not going to discuss now whether it is true or not, whether it is correct or not; whether it is beneficial or not, in the long run, to have this vitality in religion, but for good or evil it is there you cannot get out of it, you have got it now and forever and you have to stand by it, even if you have not the same faith that I have in our religion. You are bound by it, if you give it up, you will be smashed into pieces. That is the life of our race, and that must be strengthened. You have withstood the shocks of centuries simply because you took great care of it, because you sacrificed everything for it. Your forefathers underwent everything boldly, even death itself, but preserved their religion. Temple after temple was broken down by the foreign conqueror, and no sooner had the wave passed than the spire of the temple rose up again. Some of these old temples of Southern India, some like Somnath of Gujerat, will teach you volumes of wisdom, will give you a keener insight into the history of the race than any amount of books. Mark how this temple bears the marks of a hundred attacks, and a hundred regenerations, continually destroyed, and continually springing up out of the ruins rejuvenated and strong as ever! That is the national mind, that is the national life current. Follow it, and it leads to glory. Give it up and you die; death will be the only result, annihilation the only effect, the moment you step beyond that life current. I do not mean to say that other things are not necessary. I do not mean to say that political or social improvements are not necessary, but what I mean is this, and I want you to bear it in mind that they are secondary here, religion primary. The Indian mind is first religious, then anything else. This is to be strengthened. How to do it? I want to lay before you my ideas. These have been in my mind for a long time, years before I left the shores of Madras for America, and that I went to America and England was simply for this reason. I did not care at all for the Parliament of Religions it was simply an opportunity ; for that was the idea that took me all over the world. My idea is first of all to bring out these gems of spirituality that are as it were stored up in our books, and in the possession of a few, hidden, as it were, in monasteries and in forests, not only the knowledge from the hands where it is hidden, but from the still more inaccessible chest, the language in which it is preserved, the incrustation of centuries of Sanscrit words. In one word I want to make them popular I want to bring out these ideas and let them be the common property of all, of every man in India, whether he knows the Sanscrit language or not. The great difficulty in the way is the Sanscrit language, this glorious language of ours, and this difficulty cannot be removed until, if it be possible, the whole of our nation consists of good Sanscrit scholars, and you will just understand the difficulty if I tell you that I have been studying this language all my life, and yet every new book is new to me. How much more difficult would it be for people who never have time to study the language thoroughly? They must be taught in the language of the people; at the same time, Sanscrit education must go along with it, because with that Sanscrit education the very sound of Sanscrit words gives a prestige and a power and a strength to the race. The attempts of the great Râmânuja, and of Chaitanya and of Kabir to raise the lower classes of India show that marvellous results were attained at the time of the lives of those great prophets, yet the later failures have to be explained, why the effect stopped almost within a century of the passing away of these great masters. The secret is here. They raised the lower classes ; they had all the wish that they should come up, but they did not put their energies to the spread of the Sanskrit language among the masses. Even the great Buddha made one false step in that movement when he stopped the Sanscrit language from being studied by the masses. He wanted rapid and hurried work and translated and preached in the language of the day, Pali. That was grand, the people understood him, he was speaking in the language of the people. That was great ; it spread the ideas quickly and made them reach far and wide, but, along with that, Sanscrit ought to have gone. Knowledge would come, but the prestige was not there, culture was not there. It is culture that withstands shocks not a simple mass of knowledge. You can put a mass of knowledge into the world, but that will not do it much good. There must come culture into the blood. We all know in modern history, of nations which have masses of knowledge, but what of them? They are like tigers, they are like savages, because culture is not there. Knowledge is only skin-deep, as civilisation is, and a little scratch brings out the old savage. Such things happen. This is the danger. Teach the masses in the vernaculars, give them ideas ; they will get information, but something more is necessary ; give them culture. Until you can give them that, there is no permanence of this raised condition of the masses ; there will be another caste created which possesses the advantage of the knowledge of the Sanscrit language which will quickly rise above the rest, and rule them. The only safety, I tell you, men who belong to the lower castes, the only way to raise your condition is to study Sanscrit, and this fighting and writing, and frothing, against the higher castes is in vain, it does no good, and it creates fighting and quarrel and this race, unfortunately already divided, is going to be divided more and more. The only way to bring about levelling ideas of caste is to appropriate the culture, the education, which is the strength of the highest castes. That done, you have what you want.

In connection with this I want to discuss one question which has a particular bearing with regard to Madras, there is a theory that there was a race of mankind in Southern India called the Dravidians entirely differing from another race in Northern India called the Aryans, and that the Southern India Brahmins are the only Aryans that came from the North, the rest of Southern Indian mankind are of entirely different caste and race to those of Southern India Brahmins. This is entirely unfounded. The only proof of it is that there is a difference of language between the North and the South. I do not see any other difference. We are so many Northern men here, and I ask my European friends to pick out the Northern and Southern men from this assembly. Where is the difference? A little difference of language. But the Brahmins are a race that came here speaking the Sanscrit language! Well then they took up the Dravidian language and forgot their Sanscrit. Why have not the other castes done the same? Why did not all the other castes come one after the other from Northern India, forget their language, and take up the Dravidian? That is an argument working both ways. Do not believe in such things. There may have been a Dravidian people, who vanished from here, and the few who remain are in forests and other places. Quite possible that the language may have been taken up, but they are also all Aryans coming from the North; the whole of India is Aryan nothing else. Then there is the other idea that the Sudra caste are surely the aborigines. What are they? They are slaves. They say history repeats itself. Because the Americans, and English, and Dutch, and Portuguese, got hold of the poor Africans, made them work hard while they lived and threw them aside when they died and because their children of mixed birth were made into slaves and kept in that condition long—from that example, the mind jumps back several thousand years, and the same things is supposed to be repeated here; and the archæologist dreams that India was full of dark-eyed aborigines, and the bright Aryan came from, the Lord knows where. According to some they came from Central Thibet, others will have it that they came from Central Asia. There are patriotic Englishmen who think that the Aryans were all red-haired. Others think they were all black-haired, according to their own choice. If the writer happens to be a black haired man the Aryans were all black. Of late there was an attempt made to prove that the Aryans lived on the Swiss lakes. Some say now that they lived at the North Pole. As for the truth of it, there is not one word in our scriptures, not one to prove that he has ever come from any where which makes the Aryan go further than India, and in ancient India was included Afghanistan; there it ends. The theory that the Sudra caste were all non-Aryans, is equally illogical, and equally irrational. It would not have been possible in those days for a few settling Aryans to live there with a hundred thousand slaves at their back. These slaves would have eaten them up, destroyed them in five minutes. The only explanation is to be found in the Mahābhārata, which says that in the beginning of the Satyayuga there was one caste, the Brahmins, and then, by difference of occupation, they went on dividing themselves into all these differences of caste that is the only true and rational explanation that has been given. In the coming Satyayuga all the other castes will have to go back to the same condition. The solution of the caste-problem in India, therefore assumes this form, not to degrade the higher castes, not to out-crush the Brahmin. The Brahminhood is the idea of humanity in India, as wonderfully put forward by Sankarâchârya at the beginning of his commentary on the Gîtâ, where he wants to speak about the reason of Krishna coming as a preacher, for the preservation of Brahminhood, of Brahminness. That was the great end. This Brahmin, the man of God, he who has known Brahman, the ideal man, the perfect man, must remain; he must not go. And with all the defects of the caste system now, we know that we must all be ready to give to them this credit, that from them have come more men with that real Brahminness in them than from all the other castes. That is true. That is the credit due to them from all the other castes. We must be bold, must be brave, to speak their defects, but at the same time give the credit that is due to them. Therefore, my friends, it is no use fighting among the castes; what good will it do? It will divide us all the more, weaken us all the more, degrade us all the more. The days of exclusive privileges and exclusive claims are gone, gone for ever from the soil of India, and it is one of the great blessings of the British Rule of India. Even to the Mahommedan rule we owe that great blessing, destruction of exclusive privilege. It was after all not all bad, nothing is all bad, and nothing is all good. The Mahommedan conquest of India came as salvation to the down-trodden, to the poor. That is why one-fifth of our people have become Mahommedans. It was not all the sword that did it. It would be the height of madness to think it was all sword and fire. And one-fifth—one half—of your Madras people will become Christians if you do not take care. Was there ever a sillier thing before the world than what I saw in Malabar country. The poor Pariah is not allowed to pass through the same street as the high-caste man, but if he changes his name to an English name he is all right ; or to a Mohammedan name, he is all right. What inference would you draw, except that these Malabaris are all lunatics, their homes so many lunatic asylums, and that they are to be treated with derision by every race in India until they mend their manners and know better. Shame upon them that such wicked customs are allowed ; their own children allowed to die of starvation, and, as soon as those children belong to somebody else, feeding them fat. There ought to be no more discussions between the castes. The solution is not by bringing down the higher, but by raising the lower up to the level of the higher. And that is the line of work that has been laid down in all our books, in spite of what you may hear from some people whose knowledge of their own scriptures and whose capacity to understand the mighty plans of the ancients are only zero. They do not understand, but those do that have brains, that have the intellect to grasp the whole scope of the work. They stand aside and follow the wonderful procession of national life through the ages. They can trace step by step through all the books, ancient and modern. What is the plan? The ideal at one end is the Brahmin, and the ideal at the other end is the Chandàla, and the whole work is to raise the Chandàla up to the Brahmin. Slowly you find more and more privileges granted to them. There are books where you read such fierce words as these : "If the Sudra hears, fill his ears with molten lead, and if he remembers a line, cut him to pieces. If he says to the Brahmin "you Brahmin " cut his tongue out." This is diabolical old barbarism, no doubt but do not blame the law-givers who simply record the customs of some section of the community. Such devils arose among those ancients. There have been such every where, more or less, in all ages. Accordingly you will find that later this tone is modified a little; as for instance—"do not disturb the Sûdras but do not teach them higher things." Then gradually we find in other Smritis, especially in those that have full power now, that if the Sudras imitate the manners and customs of the Brahmins they do well, they ought to be encouraged. Thus it is going on. I have no time to place before you all these workings, nor how they can be traced in detail; but coming to plain facts, we find that all the castes are to rise slowly, how even there are thousands of castes, and some even getting admission into Brahminhood, for what prevents any caste from declaring they are Brahmins? Caste, with all its rigour, has been created in that manner. Let us suppose there are several castes with ten thousand people each. If they unite and say we will call ourselves Brahmins, nothing can stop them; I have seen it in my own life. Some castes become strong, and as soon as they all agree, who is to say nay? Because, whatever they were, each caste was exclusive of the other. It did not meddle with the other's affairs, even the several divisions of one caste did not meddle with the other divisions. And those great epoch-makers, Sankarâchârya and others, were the great caste-makers. I cannot tell you all the wonderful things they manufactured, and some of you might strongly resent what I have to say. But in my travels and experiences I have traced them out, and most wonderful results I have arrived at. They would sometimes get whole hordes of Beluchis and make them Kshatrias in one minute, whole hordes of fishermen and make them Brahmins in one minute. They were all Rishis and sages, and we have to bow down to their memory. Well, be you all Rishis and sages. That is the secret. More or less we shall all be Rishis. What is meant by a Rishi. The pure one;

pure first, and you will have power. Simply saying "I am a Rishi" will not do, but when you are a Rishi, you will find that others obey you somehow or other. Something mysterious comes out from you which makes them follow you, makes them hear you, makes them, unconsciously, go against their will, carry out your plans. That is Rishidharma.

Now, these are not details. Details have to be evolved through enough generations. But this is merely a suggestion in order to show you that these quarrels should cease. Especially I regret that in modern times there should be so much discussion between the castes. This must cease. It is useless on both sides; on the side of the high-caste, especially the Brahmins, because the day for these privileges and exclusive claims is gone. The duty of every aristocracy is to dig its own grave, and the sooner it does the better: The more it delays, the more it will rot and the worse death it will die. It is the duty of the Brahmin, therefore, to work for the salvation of the rest of the unkind in India. If he does that, and so long as he does that, he is a Brahmin, but he is no Brahmin when he goes out making money. You on the other hand should give help only to the rightful Brahmin, who deserves it; that which goes to heaven, but sometimes gifts to another person who does not deserve it leads to the other place, says the scripture. You must be your guard about that. Only the Brahmin who has no secular employment. Secular employment is not for the Brahmin but for the other castes. To the Brahmins I appeal that they must work hard to raise the Indian people by teaching them what they know, by giving out the culture that they have accumulated for centuries. It is the duty, early, of the Brahmins of India to remember that they are really Brahmins. As Manu says, "all these privileges and honors are given to the Brahmin because with him is the treasury of virtue. You must open that treasury and distribute it to the world. It is true that he was the earliest preacher to the Indian races, he was the first to attain to higher realisation of life before others could reach the idea. It was not his fault that he marched a head of the other castes. Why did not the other castes so understand? Why did the others first sit down and be lazy, and make the race between the hare and the tortoise? But it is one thing to gain an advantage, and another thing to preserve it for evil use. Whenever power is used for evil it becomes diabolical; it must be used for good. So this accumulated culture of ages of which he has been the trustee he must now give to the people at large, and it was because he did not give it to the people at large that the Mahommedan invasion happend. It was because he did not open this treasury to the people from the begining that for a thousand years we have been trodden under the heels of every one who chooses to come into India, it was through that we have become degraded, and that must be the first task to break open the cells that hide the wonderful treasures which our common ancestors accumulated, bringing them out, and giving them to everybody, and the Brahmin must do it first. There is an old superstition in Bengal that if the cobra that bites sucks out his own poison the patient must survive. Well then, the Brahmin must suck out his own poison. To the non-Brahmin castes, I say wait be not in a hurry. Do not seize every opportunity of fighting the Brahmin, because I have shown you that you are suffering from your own fault. Who told you to neglect spirituality and Sanscrit learning. What have you been doing all this time? Why have you been indifferent and now fret and fume because somebody else had more brains, more energy, more pluck and go than you ; instead of wasting your energies in these vain discussions and quarrels in the pages of our newspapers instead of trying to fight and quarrel in your own home, which is sinful, use all your energies in acquiring the culture which the Brahmin has, and the thing is done. Why do you not become Sanskrit scholars? Why do you not spend millions to bring Sanscrit education among all the castes of India? The moment you do that you are equal to the Brahmin. That is the secret of power in India.

Sanscrit and prestige go together. As soon as you have that none dares say anything against you. That is the one secret ; take that up. The whole universe, to use the ancient Advaitist simile, is in a state of self-hypnotism. It is the will that is the power. It is the man of strong will that throws, as it were, a halo round him, and brings all the other people to the same state of vibration that he has in his own mind ; such gigantic men appear. And what is the idea? That, just as in the case of one powerful individual, when many of us have the same thought, we become powerful. Why is it that organisations are so powerful? Why is it, to take a case in hand, that forty millions of Englishmen rule three-hundred millions of people here? You say organisation is material. What is the psychological explanation? These forty millions can put their wills together, and that means infinite power and you three hundred millions are each separate from the other. Therefore, to make a great future India, the whole secret lies in that organisation, accumulation, co-ordination of powers, of wills. Already before my mind rises one of the marvellous verses of the Atharvana Veda Samhita which says. "Be you all of one mind be you all of one thought, for in the days, of yore, the gods being of one mind, were enabled to receive oblations." The gods can be worshipped by men because they were of one mind, and that is the secret of society. And the more you fight and quarrel about trivialities such, as "Dravidian" and "Aryan," "Brahmins" and "non-Brahmins," the farther you are from that accumulation of energy and power which is to make the future India. For, mark you, the future India depends entirely upon that. This is the secret, accumulation of the will-powers, co-ordination, bringing them all as it were, into one focus. Each Chinaman thinks his own way, and a handful of Japanese think all in the same way and you know the result. That is how it goes throughout the history of the world. You find compact little nations always ruling huge unwieldy nations and it is natural, because it is easier for the little compact nations to bring their ideas into the same focus, and they become developed. And the bigger the nation, the more unwieldy they are, born as it were a disorganised mob, they cannot combine. All these quarrels must cease.

There is yet another defect in us. Through centuries of slavery we have become like a pack of women. You scarcely can get three women together in this country or any country in the world for five minutes, but they quarrel. They make big societies in European countries, and make tremendous declarations of woman's power and so on; then they quarrel, and some man comes and rules them all. They require some man to rule them yet, all over the world. We are like that; women we are. If a woman comes to lead them they all begin immediately to criticise her, tear her to pieces, and make her sit down. If a man comes, and gives them a little harsh treatment, scolds them now and then, it is all right, they have been used to that mesmerism. The whole world is full of mesmerists and hypnotists. We are like that. If one man stands up and tries to become great, you all try to hold him down, and if a foreign man comes and tries to kick you, it is all right. You have been used to it. Slaves must become great masters ; so give that upon. This shall be your keynote the great mother, for the coming fifty years, and all other vain Gods may disappear for that time. All other Gods are sleeping. This alone is the God that is awake, your own race, everywhere his hands, everywhere his feet, everywhere his ears, he covers everything. What vain Gods will you go after and yet cannot worship the God that we see all around us, the Virdt. When you have worshipped this you will be able to worship all other Gods. Before you can crawl half a mile, you want to cross the ocean, like Hanuman. It cannot be. Everyone going to be a Yogi, everyone going to meditate? It cannot be. The whole day mixing with the world, with Karma Kānda, and in the evening sitting down and blowing through your nose. Is it so easy, Rishis coming flying through the air because you have blown three times through the nose? Is it a joke, all nonsense? What is needed is Chittasuddhi, purification of the heart, and how does that come? The first of all worship, is the worship of the Virdt, those all around ; worship it, not serve. No other English word will do there. Worship is the exact Sanscrit word. These are all your gods, men and animals, and the first gods you have to worship are your own fellow-countrymen. That is what you have to worship instead of being jealous of each other and fighting each other. It is the most terrible Karma for which you are suffering, and yet it will not open your eyes.

The subject is so great I do not know where to stop, and I must bring my lecture to a close by placing before you in a few words the plans I want to carry out in Madras,

We must have a hold on the spiritual and secular education of the nation. Do you realise that? You must dream, you must talk, you must think, and you must work. Till then there is no salvation for the race. The education that you are getting now has some good points, but it has a tremendous disadvantage and this disadvantage is so great that the good things are all weighed down. In the first place it is not a man-making education, it is merely and entirely a negative education. A negative education, or any training that is given to negation, is worse than death. The child is taken to school and the first thing he learns is that his father is a fool, second his grandfather is a crazy lunatic, the third that all his teachers are hypocrites, the fourth that all sacred books are lies! By the time he is sixteen he is a mass of negation, lifeless and boneless. And the result is that fifty years of such education has not produced one man in the three Presidencies. Every man of originality that has been produced has been educated elsewhere, not in this country, or they have gone to the old universities once more to cleanse themselves of superstitions. This is not education. Education is not the amount of information that is put into your brain and running riot there, undigested, all your life. We must have life-building, man-making, character-making, assimilation of ideas. If you have assimilated five ideas and made them your life and character, you have more education than any man who can give by heart a whole library. Yatha kharaschandana bhàravàhi bhàrasya vettà na tu chandanasya. "The ass carrying its load of sandalwood knows only the weight, and not the value of the sandalwood." If education is identical with information, the libraries are the greatest sages in the world, encyclopædias are the Rishis. The ideal, therefore, is that we must have the whole education of our country, spiritual and secular, in our own hands, and it must be on national lines, through national methods, as far as practicable. Of course this is a very big order, a big plan. I do not know whether it will ever work itself out. But we must begin the work. How? For instance take Madras. We must have a temple; for, with Hindus, religion must come first. Then, you say, all sects will quarrel about the temple. We will make a non-sectarian temple, giving only Om as the symbol, the greatest symbol of any sect. If there is any sect here which believes that Om ought not to be the symbol it has no right to be Hindu. All will have the right to be Hindus. All will have the right to interpret, each one according to his own sect, ideas, but we must have a common temple. You can each have your own images and symbols in other places, but do not quarrel here with the others who differ from you. Here will be taught the common grounds of our different sects, and at the same time the different sects will have perfect liberty to come there and teach their doctrines, only with one restriction, do not quarrel with other sects. Say what you have to say, the world wants it, but the world has no time to hear what you think about other people, keep that to yourselves. Secondly, along with this temple there will be an institution to train teachers and preachers. These teachers must go about preaching religion and giving secular education to our people; they must carry both, as we have been already carrying religion, from door to door. Let us, along with it, carry secular education from door to door. That can be easily done. Then it will extend in its working order to train these bands of teachers and preachers, and gradually we shall have these temples in other centres, until we have covered the whole of India. That is the plan. It may appear gigantic. But it is needed. You may ask where is the money. Money is not needed. Money is nothing. For the last twelve years of my life I did not know where the next meal would come from, but money and everything I want must come because they are my slaves and not I theirs; money and everything else must come—must, that is the word. Where are the men? That is the question. I have told you what we have become. Where are the men? Young men of Madras, my hope is in you. Do you respond to the call of your nation? Each one of you has a glorious future, if you dare believe me. Have the tremendous faith in yourselves, which I had when I was a child and I am working it out. Have that faith, each one, in yourself, that eternal power is lodged in everyone of our souls. You will revive the whole of India. Aye, we will go to every country under the sun, and our ideas must be, within the next ten years, a component of the many forces that are working to make up every nation in the world. We must enter into the life of every race, inside India and outside India; we will work. That is how it should be. I want young men. Says the Vedas, "It is the strong, the healthy, of sharp intellect, and young, that will reach the Lord." This is the time to decide your future; with the energy of youth, when you have not been worked out, nor jaded but still in the freshness and vigour of youth. Work; this is the time; for the freshest, the most untouched, and unsmelled flowers alone are to be laid at the feet of the Lord. He receives. Get up, therefore, greater works are to be done than picking quarrels, and becoming lawyers, and such things. A far greater work is this sacrifice of yourselves for the benefit of your race, for the welfare of humanity, for life is short. What is in this life? You are Hindus, and there is the instinctive belief in you that life is eternal. Sometimes I have young men in Madras coming and talking to me about Atheism, I do not believe a Hindu can become an atheist. He may read European books, and persuade himself he is a materialist but only for five months, mark you. It is not in your blood. You cannot believe what is not in your constitution ; it would be a hopeless task for you. Do not attempt that sort of thing. I once attempted it when I was a boy ; but it could not be. Life is short, but the soul is immortal and eternal, and therefore, one thing being certain, death, let us take up a great ideal, and give up the whole life to it. Let this be our determination, and may He, the Lord, "Who comes again and again for the salvation of his own people," speaking through our scriptures, may the great Krishna, bless us and lead us all to the fulfilment of our aims !

During his stay in Madras the Swami presided at the annual meeting of the Chennapuri Annadana Samajam, an institution of a charitable nature, and in the course of a brief address referred to a remark by a previous speaker deprecating special almsgiving to the Brahmin over and above the other castes. He pointed out that, this had its good as well as its bad side. All the culture practically, which the nation possessed was among the Brahmins, and they also had been the thinkers of the nation. Take away the means of living which enabled them to bethinkers and the nation as a whole would suffer. Speaking of the indiscriminate charity of India as compared with the legal charity of other nations, he said, the outcome of their system of relief was that the vagabond in India was contented to receive readily what he was given readily and lived a peaceful and contented life: while the vagabond in the West, unwilling to go to the poor-houses,—for man loved liberty more than food—turned a robber, the enemy of society and necessitated the organisation of a system of magistracy, police, jails, and botheration of that sort. Poverty there must be, so long as the disease known as civilisation existed : and hence the need for relief. So that they had to choose between the indiscriminate charity of India, which, in the case of Sanyasins at any rate, even if they were not sincere men, at least forced them to learn some little of their scriptures before they were able to obtain food ; and the discriminate charity of Western nations which necessitated a costly system of poor law relief, and in the end succeeded only in changing mendicants into criminals.

CALCUTTA.

The Swami's long journey ended with Calcutta. In accordance with the arrangements of the reception Committee, over which Maharaja Bahadur of Durbhanga presided, he took a special train from Kidderpur and reached the Sealdah Station (Calcutta) early in the morning. Here an immense crowd awaited him, and he was greeted with intense enthusiasm, which was maintained during the whole of his progress through the decorated streets of the City to Ripon College, where a short stay was made. Breakfast was afterwards taken at Pasupati Bose's residence. The official reception was a week later, in the courtyard of the residence of the late Raja Sri Radhakant Deb Bahadur, at Sobha Bazar, when Raja Binoya Krishna Bahadur took the chair. There must have been five thousand people present. After brief introductory remarks from the Chairman, he read the following address, which was presented enclosed in a silver casket:—

TO SRIMAT VIVEKĀNANDA SWAMI.

DEAR BROTHER,—

We, the Hindu inhabitants of Calcutta and of several other places in Bengal, offer you on your return to the land of your birth a hearty welcome. We do so with a sense of pride as well as of gratitude, for by your noble work and example in various parts of the world you have done honour not only to our religion but also to our country and to our Province in particular.

At the great Parliament of Religions which constituted a Section of the World's Fair held in Chicago in 1893 you presented the principles of the Aryan religion. The substance of exposition was to most of your audience a revelation and its manner overpowering alike by its grace and its strength. Some may have received it in a questioning spirit, a few may have criticised it, but its general effect was a revolution in the religious ideas of a large section of cultivated Americans. A new light had dawned on their mind and with their accustomed earnestness and love of truth they determined to take full advantage of it. Your opportunities widened ; your work grew. You had to meet call after call ; from many cities in many states, answer many queries, satisfy many doubts, solve many difficulties. You did all this work with energy, ability and sincerity ; and it has led to lasting results. Your teaching has deeply influenced many an enlightened circle in the American Commonwealth, has stimulated thoughts and research ; and has in many instances definitely altered religious conceptions in the direction of an increased appreciation of Hindu ideals. The rapid growth of clubs and societies for the co-operative study of religious and the investigation of spiritual truth is witness to your labours in the far West. You may be regarded as the founder of a College in London for the teaching of the Vedànta philosophy. Your lectures have been regularly delivered, punctually attended and widely appreciated. Their influence has extended beyond the walls of the lecture-rooms. The love and esteem which have been evoked by your teaching are evidenced by the warm acknowledgments in the address presented to you on the eve of your departure from London by the students of the Vedànta philosophy in that town.

Your success as a teacher has been due not only to your deep and intimate acquaintance with the truths of the Aryan religion and your skill in exposition by speech and writing but also and largely to your personality. Your lectures, your essays and your books have high merits, spiritual and literary, and they could not but produce their effect. But it has been heightened in a manner that defies expression, by the example of your simple, sincere, self-denying life, your modesty, devotion and earnestness.

While acknowledging your services as a teacher of the sublime truths of our religion we feel that we must render a tribute to the memory of your revered preceptor Sri Ramakrishna Paramahansa. To him we largely owe even you. With his rare and magical insight he early discovered the heavenly spark in you and predicted for you a career which happily is now in course of realisation. He it was that unsealed the vision and the faculty divine with which God had blessed you, gave to your thoughts and aspirations the bent that was awaiting the holy touch and aided your pursuits in the region of the unseen. His most precious legacy to posterity was yourself.

Go on noble soul working steadily and valiantly in the path you have chosen. You have a world to conquer. You have, to interpret and vindicate the religion of the Hindus to the ignorant, the sceptical, the wilfully blind. You have begun the work in a spirit which commands our admiration and have already achieved a success to which many lands bear witness. But a great deal yet remains to be done and our own country, or rather we should say your own country, waits on you. The truths of the Hindu religion have to be expounded to large numbers of Hindus themselves. Brace yourself then for the grand exertion. We have confidence in you and in the righteousness of our cause. Our national religion seeks to win no material triumphs. Its purpose are spiritual; its weapon is a truth which is hidden away from material eyes and yields only to the reflective reason. Call on the world, and where necessary, Hindus themselves, to open the inner eye, to transcend the senses, read rightly the sacred books to face the supreme reality, and realise their position and destiny as men. No one is better fitted than yourself to give the awakening or make the call, and we can only assure you of our hearty sympathy and loyal co-operation in that work which is apparently your mission ordained by Heaven.

We remain, Dear brother,

Your loving friends & admirers.

The swami's reply created a profound impression, and was as follows:—

One wants to lose the universal in the individual, one renounces, flies off, and tries to cut himself off from all associations of the body, of the past, one works hard to forget even that he is a man; yet, in the heart of his heart, there is a soft sound, one string vibrating, one whisper, which tells him, East or West, home is best. Citizens of the capital of, this Empire, before you I stand, not as a Sanyāsin, no, not even as a preacher, but I come before you the same Calcutta boy to talk to you as I used to do. Aye, I would like to sit upon the dust of the streets of this city, and, with the freedom of childhood, talk to you my mind, my brothers. Accept, therefore, my heart-felt thanks for this unique word that you have used, "Brother." Yes; I am your brother, and you are my brothers. I was asked by an English friend on the eve of my departure, "Swami how do you like now your motherland after four years' experience of the luxurious, glorious, powerful West?" I could only answer "India I loved before I came away. Now the very dust of India has become holy to me, the very air is now to me holy, it is now the holy land, the place of pilgrimage, the Tirṭa." Citizens of Calcutta--my brothers—

I cannot express my gratitude to you for the kindness you have shown, or rather I should not thank you at all, for you are my brothers, you have done only a brother's duty, aye, only a Hindü brother's duty, for such family ties, such relationships, such love, exist nowhere beyond the bounds of this motherland of ours. The Parliament of Religions was a great affair, no doubt. We have thanked the gentlemen, who organised the meeting from various cities of this land, and they deserved all our thanks for the kindness, that has been shown to us, but yet allow me to construe for you the history of the Parliament of Religions. They wanted a horse, and they wanted to ride it. There were people there who wanted to make it a heathen show, but it became otherwise, it could not help being so. Most of them were kind, but we have thanked them enough.

On the other hand, my mission in America was not for the Parliament of Religions. That was only something in the way, it was only an opening, an opportunity and, of course, for that we are very thankful to the members of the Parliament, but really our thanks are due to the great people of the United States, the American nation, the warm-hearted, hospitable, great nation of America, where more than anywhere else the feeling of brotherhood has been developed. An American meets you for five minutes on board a train, and you are his friend, and the next moment he invites you as a guest to his home, and opens the secret of his whole living there. That is the American race, and we cannot be thankful enough to them. Their kindness to me is past all narration, it would take me years yet to tell you how I have been treated by them, most kindly and most wonderfully. So are our thanks due to the other nation on the other side of the Atlantic. No one ever landed on English soil with more hatred in his heart for a race than I did for the English, and, on this platform, are present English friends who can bear witness to the fact, but the more I lived among them, saw how the machine is working, the English national life, mixed with them, found where the heart-beat of the nation was, the more I loved them. There is none among you here present, my brothers, who loves the English people more than I do. You have to see what is going on there, and you have to mix with them. As the philosophy, our national philosophy of the Vedānta, has summarised all misfortune, all misery from that one cause, ignorance, herein also we must understand that the difficulties that arise between us and the English people are mostly due to that ignorance ; we do not know them, they do not know us. Unfortunately, to the Western mind, spirituality, nay, even morality, is eternally connected with worldly prosperity, and as soon as an Englishman, or any other Western man, lands on our soil, and finds a land of poverty and of misery he forthwith concludes, that there cannot be any religion here, there cannot be any morality even. His own experience is true. In Europe, in the cold climate of Europe, and through many other circumstances, poverty and sin go together, but not in India. In India, on the other hand, my experience is, the poorer the man the better off he is in morality. Now this takes time to understand, and how many foreign people are there who will stop to understand this very secret of national existence in India? Few are there who will have the patience to study the nation and understand. Here and here alone is the only race where poverty does not mean crime, poverty does not mean sin, and here is the only race where not only poverty does not mean crime, but poverty has been deified, and the beggar's garb is the garb of the highest in the land. On the other hand, we have also similarly, patiently to study their social institutions, and not rush into mad judgments about them. Their intermingling of sexes, their different customs, their manners, have all their meaning, have all their grand sides, if you have the patience to study them. Not that I mean that we are going to borrow their manners and customs, not that they are going to borrow ours, for the manners and customs of each race are the outgrowth of centuries of patient growth in that race and each one has a deep meaning behind it, and therefore neither are they to ridicule our manners and customs, nor we theirs.

Again, I want to make another statement before this assembly. My work in England has been more satisfactory to me than my work in America. That bold, brave, and steady Englishman, if I may use the expression, with his skull a little thicker than those of other people—if you once put an idea into that brain, screw it through that skull, it is there, it never comes out, and that immense practicality and energy of the race makes it sprout up and immediately bear fruit. Not so in any other country. That immense practicality, that immense vitality of the race you do not see anywhere else. There is less of imagination, but more of work, and who knows the well-spring, the mainspring of the English heart? How much of imagination and of feeling is there? They are a nation of heroes, they are the true Kshatriyas, their education is to hide their feelings, and never to show them. From their childhood they have been educated up to that. Seldom will you find an Englishman manifesting feeling, nay, even an English woman. I have seen English women go to work and do deeds which would stagger the bravest of Bengalees to follow. But with all this heroic superstructure, behind this covering of the fighter, there is a deep spring of feeling in the English heart, if you once know how to reach it. If you are there, and if you have personal contact, mix with him, open his heart he is your friend for ever, he is your servant. Therefore in my opinion, my work in England has been more satisfactory than any where else. I firmly believe that if I should die to-morrow the work in England would not die, but would go on expanding all the time.

Gentleman, you have touched another chord in my heart, the deepest of all, that is the mention of my teacher, my master, my hero, my ideal, my God in life—Sri Ramkrishna Paramahansa. If there has been anything achieved by me, by thoughts, or words, or deeds, if from my lips ever has fallen one word that has helped any one in the world I lay no claim to it, it was his. But if there have been curses falling from my lips if there has been hatred coming out of me, it is all mine and not his. All that has been weak has been mine, and all that has been life-giving, strengthening pure, and holy, has been his inspiration, his words, and he himself. Yes, my friends, yet the world has to know that man. We read in history of the world of prophets and their lives coming down to us through centuries of writings and workings by their disciples ; through thousands of years of smoothening and plastering the lives of great prophets of yore come down to us ; and yet, in my opinion, not one stands as high in brilliance as that life which I saw with my own eyes, under whose shadow I have lived, at whose feet I have learnt everything, the life of Ramkrishna Paramahansa. Aye, friends, you all know the celebrated saying of the Gîtâ :—

Yadà yadà hi dharmasya glānirbhavati Bhārata, Abhyuttānamadharmasya tadātmānam srijānyaham. Parit-rāḍāya sādhnūnam vināśāya cha dushkritām Dharmā sarvthāpanārthāya sambhavāmi yuge yuge.

Along with it you have to understand one thing more. Such a thing is before us to day. Before one of these tidal waves of spirituality comes, there are little whirlpools of a similar nature all over society. One of these stands up, at first unknown, unperceived, and unthought of, assuming proportion, swallowing, as it were, and assimilating, all the other little whirlpools, becoming immense, becoming a tidal wave, and falling upon society with a power which none can resist. Such is happening. If you have eyes you can read it. If your heart is open you will receive it. If you are truth-seekers you will find it. Blind, blind indeed is the man who does not see the signs of the day. Aye, this boy born of poor Brahmin parents in some wayside village somewhere, of which very few of you have even heard, is literally being worshipped in lands which have been fulminating against heathen worship for centuries. Whose power is it? Is it mine, or yours? It is none else than the power which was manifested here as Ramakrishna Paramahansa. For you and I, and sages and prophets, nay, even incarnations, the whole universe, are but manifestations of power more or less individualised, more or less concentrated. Here has been a manifestation of an immense power, just the very beginnings of whose workings we are seeing, and before this generation passes away, you will see more wonderful workings of that power. It has come just in time for the regeneration of India, for we forget from time to time the vital power that must always work in India.

Each nation has its own peculiar method of work. Some work through politics, some through social reforms, some through other lines. With us religion is the only ground through which we can move. The Englishman can understand religion, even, through politics. Perhaps, the American can understand religion, even through social reforms.

But the Hindu can understand even politics when it is given through religion, sociology must come through religion, everything must come through religion. For that is the theme, the rest are the variations in the national life-music. And that was in danger. It seemed to be that we were going to change this theme in our national life, as it were that we were going to exchange the backbone of our existence, as it were that we were trying to replace a spiritual by a political back-bone. And if we could have succeeded, the result would have been annihilation. But it was not to be. So this power became manifest. I do not care in what light you understand this great sage, it matters not how much respect you pay to him, but I challenge you face to face with the fact that here is a manifestation of the most marvellous power that has been for several centuries in India, and it is your duty, as Hindus, to study this power, to find what has been done for the regeneration, for the good of India, and for the good of the whole human race. Aye, long before ideas of universal religion and brotherly feeling between different sects had been mooted and discussed in any country in the world, here, in sight of this city, was living a man whose whole life was a Parliament of Religions as it should be.

Gentlemen, the highest ideal in our book is the Impersonal, and would to God everyone of us here were high enough to realise that Impersonal ideal, but, as that cannot be, it is absolutely necessary for the vast majority of us human beings to have a Personal ideal, and no nation, can rise, can become great, can work at all, without enthusiastically coming round one of these great ideals in life. Political ideals, personages representing political ideals, even social ideals, commercial ideals, would have no power in India. We want spiritual ideals before us, we want enthusiastically to gather round grand spiritual names. Our heroes must be spiritual. Such a hero has been given unto us in the person of Ramakrishna Paramahansa. If this nation wants to rise, take my word, it will have to come enthusiastically round this name. It does not matter who preaches Ramakrishna Paramahansa, whether I, or you, or anybody. But him I place before you, and it is for you to judge, and for the good of our race, for the good of our nation, to judge now, what you shall do with this great ideal of life. One thing we are to remember, that it was the purest of all lives that you have ever seen, or, let me tell you distinctly, that you have read of. And it is a fact before you that it is the most marvellous manifestation of soul-power that you can read of, much less expect to see. Within ten years of his passing away this power has encircled the globe ; that is before you. Gentlemen, in duty bound therefore, for the good of our race, for the good of our religion, I place this great spiritual ideal before you. Judge him not through me. I am only a weak instrument. Let not his character be judged by seeing me. It was so great that I, or anyone of his disciples, if we spent hundreds of lives, could not do justice to a millionth part of what he really was. Judge for yourselves ; in the heart of your hearts is the Eternal Witness, and may He, the same Ramakrishna Paramahansa, for the good of our nation, for the welfare of our country, and for the good of humanity, open your hearts, make you true and steady to work for the immense change which must come, whether we work or not. For the work of the Lord does not wait for the likes of you or me. He can raise his workers from the dust by hundreds and thousands. It is a glory and a privilege that we are allowed to work at all under Him.

From this the idea expands. As you have pointed out to me we have to conquer the world. That we have! India must conquer the world, and nothing less than that is my ideal. It may be very big, it may astonish many of you but it is so. We must conquer the world or die. There is no other alternative. The sign of life is expansion; we must go out, expand, show life, or degrade, fester, and die. There is no other alternative. Take either of these, either live or die. Now, we all know about the petty jealousies and quarrels that we have in our country. Take my word, it is the same everywhere. The other nations with their political lives, have foreign policies. When they find too much quarrelling at home, they look for somebody abroad to quarrel with, and the quarrel at home stops. We have these quarrels, without any foreign policy to stop them. This must be our eternal foreign policy, preaching the truths of our Sāstras to the nations of the world. Do you require any other proof that this will unite us as a race, I ask you who are politically minded? This very assembly is a sufficient witness. Secondly, apart from these selfish considerations, there are the unselfish, the noble, the living example behind us. One of the great causes of India's misery and downfall has been that she narrowed herself, went into her shell, as the oyster does, and refused to give her jewels and her treasures to other races of mankind, refused to give the life-giving truths to thirsting nations outside the Aryan fold. That has been the one great cause, that we did not go out, that we did not compare notes with other nations has been the one great cause of our downfall, and every one of you know that that little stir, the little life that you see in India begins from the day when Raja Rammohar Roy broke through the walls of that exclusiveness. Since that day the history in India has taken another turn, and now it is, growing with accelerated motion. If we have had little revulets in the past, deluges are coming, and none can resist them. Therefore we must go out, and the secret of life is give and take. Are we to take always, to sit at the feet of the Westerns to learn everything, even religion? We can learn machines from them. We can learn many other things. But we have to teach them something, and that is our religion, that is our spirituality. For a complete civilisation the world is waiting, waiting for the treasures to come out of India, waiting for the marvellous spiritual inheritance of the race, which, through decades of degradation and misery, the nation has still clutched unto her breast. The world is waiting for that treasure ; little do you know how much of hunger and of thirst there is outside of India for these wonderful treasures of your forefathers. We talk here, we quarrel with each other, we laugh at and we ridicule everything sacred, till it has become almost a national vice to ridicule everything holy. Little do we understand the heart pangs of millions waiting outside the walls, stretching forth their hands for a little bit of that nectar which our forefathers have preserved in this land of India. Therefore we must go out, exchange our spirituality for anything they have to give us; for the marvels of the region of spirit we will exchange the marvels of the region of matter. We will not be students always, but teachers also. There cannot be friendship without equality, and there cannot be equality when one party is always the teacher and the other party sits always at the feet. If you want to become equal with the Englishman or the American, you will have to teach as well as to learn, and you have plenty yet to teach to the world for centuries to come. This has to be done. Fire and enthusiasm must be in our blood. We Bengalees have been credited with imagination, and I believe it. We have been ridiculed as an imaginative race, as men with a good deal of feeling. Let me tell you, my friends, intellect is great indeed, but it stops within a certain bound. It is through the heart, and the heart alone, that inspiration comes. It is through the feelings that the highest secrets are reached, and, therefore, it is the Bengalee that has to do this work, the man of feeling.

Uttishthata jāgrata prāpya varān nibodhata, etc. "Awake arise and stop not till the desired end is reached." Young men of Calcutta, arise awake, for the time is propitious. Already everything is opening out before us. Be bold and fear not. It is only in our scriptures that this adjective is given unto the Lord—Abh, Abh. We have to become Abh, fearless, and our task, will be done. Arise, awake, for your country needs this tremendous sacrifice. It is the young men that will do it. Yuvā āsishto dravishto balishto medhāvī, etc. "The young, the energetic, the strong, the well-built, the intellectual," for them is the task. And we have hundreds and thousands of such young men in Calcutta. If, as you say, I have done something, remember that I was that good-for-nothing boy playing in the streets of Calcutta. If I have done so much how much more will you do? Arise and awake, the world is calling upon you. In other parts of India, there is intellect, there is money, but enthusiasm is only in my motherland. That must come out, and, therefore, arise young men of Calcutta, with enthusiasm in your blood. Think not that you are poor, that you have no friends. Aye, who ever saw money make the man; it is man that always makes money. The whole world has been made by the energy of man, by the power of enthusiasm, by the power of faith. Those of you who have studied that most beautiful of all Upanishads, the katha, remember how the king was going to make a great sacrifice, and, instead of giving away things that were worth anything was giving away cows and horses that were not of any use, and the book says that at that time Sraddha entered into the heart of his son Nachiketa. I would not translate this word sraddha to you, it would be a mistake ; it is a wonderful word to understand, and much depends on it ; we will see how it works, for immediately we find Nachiketa telling unto himself, "I am superior to many, I am inferior to few ; I can also do something." And this boldness increased, and the boy wanted to solve the problem which was in his mind, the problem of death. The solution could only be got by going to the house of Death, and the boy went. There he was, brave Nachiketa, waiting at the house of Death for three days, and you know how he got everything else. What we want is this sraddha. Unfortunately, it has nearly vanished from India, and this is why we are in our present state. What makes the difference between man and man is the difference in this sraddha, and nothing else. What makes one man great and another weak and low is this s'raddha. My master used to say, he who thinks himself weak shall become weak, and that is true. This sraddha must enter into you. Whatever of material power you see manifested by the Western races is the outcome of this sraddha, because they believe in their muscles and if you believe in your spirit, how much more will it work. Believe in that Infinite Soul, the Infinite Power, which, with consensus of opinion, your books and sages preach. That Atman whom nothing can destroy, in him is Infinite Power only waiting to be called out. For here is the great difference between all other philosophies and Indian Philosophy. Whether Dualistic, qualified Monistic, or Monistic, they all firmly believe that everything is in the soul itself ; it has only to come out and manifest itself. Therefore, this sraddha is what I want, and what all of us here want, this faith in ourselves, and before you is the great task to get that faith. Give up the awful disease that is creeping into our national blood, that idea of ridiculing everything, that loss of seriousness. Give that up. Be strong and have this sraddha, and everything, else is bound to follow. I have done as yet nothing ; you have to do the task. If I die to-morrow the work will not die. I sincerely believe that there will be thousands coming up from the ranks to take up the work and carry it further and further, beyond all my most hopeful imagination ever painted. I have faith in my country, and especially in the youth of my country. The youth of Bengal have the greatest of all tasks that has ever been placed on the shoulders of young men. I have travelled for the last ten years or so the whole of India, and my conviction is that from the youth of Bengal will come the power which will raise India once more to her proper spiritual place. Aye, from the youth of Bengal, with this immense amount of feeling and enthusiasm in their blood, will come those heroes, who will march from one to the other corner of this earth, travel from pole to pole, preaching and teaching the eternal spiritual truths of our forefathers. And this is the great work before you. Therefore, let me conclude, once more reminding you "Arise, awake, and stop not till the desired end is reached." Be not afraid, for all great power, throughout the history of humanity, has been with the people. From out of their ranks have come all the greatest geniuses of the world, and history can only repeat itself. Be not afraid of anything. You will do marvellous work. The moment you fear, you are nobody. It is fear that is the great cause of misery in the world. It is fear that is the greatest of all superstition. It is fear that is the cause of our woes, and it is fearlessness that brings even heaven, in a moment. Therefore "Arise, awake, and stop not till the desired goal is reached."

Gentlemen, allow me to thank you once more for all the kindness that I have received at your hands. I can only tell you that it is my wish—my intense, sincere wish—to be even of the least service to the world, and above all to my own country, and my countrymen.

One other lecture was given by the Swami while in Calcutta, on "The Vedanta in all its phases". A report follows:—

THE VEDANTA IN ALL ITS PHASES.

Away back where no recorded history, nay, even the dim light of tradition, can penetrate, has been steadily shining the light, sometimes dimmed by external circumstances, at others effulgent, but undying and steady, shedding its light not only over India, but permeating the whole thought-world with its power, silent, unperceived, gentle, yet omnipotent, like the dew that falls in the morning, unseen and unnoticed, yet bringing into bloom the fairest of roses—this has been the thought of the Upanishads, the philosophy of the Vedānta. Nobody knows when it first came to flourish on the soil of India. Guess-works have been vain. The guesses, especially of Western writers, have been so conflicting that no certain date can be ascribed to them. But we Hindus, from the spiritual standpoint, do not admit that they had any origin. This Vedānta, the philosophy of the Upanishads, I would make bold to state, has been the first, as well as the final thought that on the spiritual plane has ever been vouchsafed to man. From this light have been going Westward and Eastward, from time to time, waves from the ocean of the Vedānta. In the days of yore it travelled westward and gave its impetus to the mind of the Greeks, either in Athens, or in Alexandria, or in Antioch. The Sāṅkhya System clearly must have made its mark on the minds of the Ancient Greeks, and the Sāṅkhya, and all other systems in India, had that one authority, the Upanishads, the Vedānta. In India, too, in spite of all these jarring sects that we see to-day, and all that have been in the past, the one authority, the basis of all these systems, has yet been the Upanishads, the Vedānta. Whether you are a Dualist, or a Qualified Monist, an Advaitist, or a Visishtadvaitist, a Visuddhadvaitist, or any other Advaitist or Dvaitist, or whatever you may call yourself, there stands behind you as your authority, your Sāstras, your scripture, the Upanishads. Whatever system in India does not obey the Upanishads cannot be called orthodox, and even the systems of the Jainists and the Buddhists have been rejected from the soil of India only because they did not bear allegiance to the Upanishads. Thus the Vedānta, whether we know it or not, has penetrated all the sects in India, and what we call Hinduism, this mighty Banyan with its immense, almost infinite ramifications, has been throughout interpenetrated by the influence of the Vedānta. Whether we are conscious of it or not, we think the Vedānta, we live in the Vedānta, we breathe the Vedānta, and we die in the Vedānta, and every Hindu does that. To preach Vedānta in the land of India, and before an Indian audience, seems, therefore, to be an anomaly. But it is the one thing that has got to be preached, and it is the necessity of the age that it must be preached. For, as I have just told you, all the Indian sects must bear allegiance to the Upanishads, but, among these sects there are many apparent contradictions. Many times the great sages of yore could not understand the underlying harmony of the Upanishads themselves. Many times, even, sages quarrelled, and so much so that at times it became a proverb, that they are not sages who do not differ. Nosau munirasyā matam ya nabhinnam. But the time requires that a better interpretation should be given to this underlying harmony of the Upanishadic texts; whether they are dualistic, non-dualistic, quasidualistic, or so forth, it has to be shown before the world at large ; and this work is required as much in India as outside of India, and I, through the grace of God, had the great good fortune to sit at the feet of one whose whole life was such an interpretation, whose life, a thousand-fold more than whose teaching, was a living commentary on the texts of the Upanishads, was in fact, the spirit of the Upanishads living in a human form. Perhaps I have got a little bit of that harmony; I do not know whether I shall be able to express it or not, but this is my attempt, my mission in life, to show that Vedântic Schools are not contradictory, that they all necessitate each other, all fulfil each other, and one, as it were, is the stepping-stone to the other, until the goal, the Advaita, the Tat tvam asi, is reached. There was a time in India when the Karma Kānda had its sway. There have been many grand ideals, no doubt, in that portion of the Vedas. Some of our present daily worship is still according to the precepts of the Karma Kānda. But, with all that, the Karma Kānda of the Vedas has almost disappeared from India. Very little of our life at the present day is bound and regulated by the orders of the Karma Kānda of the Vedas. In our ordinary lives we are mostly Paurānics or Tantrics, and, even where some Vedic texts are used by the Brahmins of India, the adjustment of the texts is not according to the Vedas mostly, but according to the Tantras or the Purānas. As such, to call ourselves Vedics in the sense of following the Karma Kānda of the Vedas, I do not think would be proper. But the other fact stands, that we are all of us Vedântists. The people who call themselves Hindus had better be called Vedântists, and, as I have shown you, under that one name

Vaidantika, come in all our various sects, either dualists or non-dualists.

The sects that are at the present time in India come, in general, to be divided into the two great classes of dualists and monists. The little differences which some of these sects insist upon, and upon the authority of which want to take new names, as pure Advaitists, or qualified Advaitists, and so forth, do not matter much. As a classification, either they are dualists or monists, and of the sects existing at the present time, some of them are very new, and others seem to be reproductions of very ancient sects. The one class I would represent by the life and philosophy of Ràmànuja, and the other by Sankaràcharya—Rámànuja, the leading dualistic philosopher of later India, whom all the other dualistic sects have followed, directly or indirectly, both in substance of their teaching, and in the organisations of their sects, even down to some of the most minute points of their organisation. You will be astonished, if you compare Ràmànuja and his works with the other dualistic, Vaishnavist sects in India, how much they resemble each other in organisation, teaching, and method. There have been the great Southern preacher Madhva Muni and following him our great Chaitanya, of Bengal (taking up the philosophy of the Mādhyas, and preaching it in Bengal.) There have been some other sects in Southern India also, as the qualified dualistic Sivites. The Sivites in most parts of India are Advaitists, except in some portions of Southern India, and in Ceylon. But they also only substitute Siva for Vishnu, and are Ràmànujists in every sense of the term except in the doctrine of the soul. The followers of Ràmànuja hold that it is Anu, like a particle, very small, and the followers of Sankaràcharya hold that it is Vibhu, omnipresent. There have been several non-dualistic sects. It seems that there have been sects in ancient times which Sankara's movement has entirely swallowed up and assimilated. You find sometimes a fling at Sankara himself in some of the commentaries, especially in that of Vignāna Bhikshu who, although an Advaitist, attempts to upset the Māyāvāda of Sankara. It seems there were schools who did not believe in this Māyāvāda, and they went so far as to call Sankara a crypto-Buddhist Prachanna Bauddha and they thought this Māyāvāda was taken from the Buddhists, and brought within the Vedāntic fold. However that may be, in modern times the Advaitists have all ranged themselves under Sankarācharya; and Sankarācharya and his disciples have been the great preachers of Advaita, both in Southern and in Northern India. The influence of Sankarācharya did not penetrate much into our country of Bengal, and in Cashmere and the Punjab, but in Southern India the Smartas are all followers of Sankarācharya, and with Benares as the centre, his influence is simply immense even in many parts of Northern India.

Now both Sankara and Rāmānuja laid aside all claim to originality. Rāmānuja expressly tells us he is only following the great commentary of Bodhayana. Bodhayana kṛitam bhashyam anusṛitya? That is what Rāmānuja says. He takes it up and makes of it a Sankshiptam, and that is what we have to-day. I myself never had an opportunity of seeing this commentary of Bodhayana. The late Swami Dayananda Saraswati wanted to reject every other commentary of Vyāsa Sūtras except that of Bodhayana, and although he never lost an opportunity of having a fling at Rāmānuja, he himself could never produce the Bodhayana. I have sought for it all over India, and never yet have been able to see it. But Rāmānuja is very plain on the point, and he tells us that he is taking the ideas, and sometimes the very passages, out of Bodhayana, and condensing them into the present Ràmànuja Bhàshya. It seems that Sankarà—charya was also doing the same. There are a few places in his Bhàshya which mention older commentaries, and when we know that his Guru, and his Guru's Guru, had been Vedàntists of the same school as he, sometimes even more thorough-going, bolder even than Sankara himself on certain points, it seems pretty plain that he also was not preaching anything very original, and that even in his Bhashya he himself had been doing the same work that Ràmànuja did with Bodhàyana, but from what Bhashya cannot be discovered at the present time. All these Darśanas that you have ever seen or heard of are based upon Upanishadic authority. When ever they want to quote a Sruti, they mean the Upanishads. They are always quoting the Upanishads. Following the Upanishads there come other philosophies of India, but every one of them failed in getting that hold of India which the philosophy of Vyasa got, although the philosophy of Vyasa is a development out of an older one, the Sànkhya, and every philosophy and every system in India—I mean throughout the world—owes much to Kapila perhaps the greatest name in the history of India in psychological and philosophical lines. The influence of Kapila is everywhere throughout the world. Wherever there is a recognised system of thought, there you can trace his influence; it may be thousands of years back, but yet he stands there, the shining, glorious, wonderful Kapila. His psychology and a good deal of his philosophy have been accepted by all the different sects of India, with but very little differences. In our own country, our Naiyayik philosophers could not make much impression on the philosophical world of India. They were too busy with little species and genii, and so forth, and that most cumbersome terminology, which is a life's work to study. As such, they were very busy with logic, and left philosophy to the Vedântists, but every one of the Indian philosophic sects in modern times has adopted the logical terminology of the Naiyayiks of Bengal. Jagadis, Gadadhar, and Siromani are as well-known at Nuddea, as in some of the cities in Malabar. But the philosophy of Vyasa, the Vyasa Sutras, is firm-seated, and has attained the permanence of that which it intended to present to men, the orthodox and Vedântic side of philosophy. Reason was entirely subordinated to the Srutis, and as Sankarâcharya declares, Vyasa did not care to reason at all. His idea in writing the Sutras was just to bring together, with one thread to make a garland of, the flowers of Vedantic texts. His Sutras are admitted so far as they are subordinate to the authority of the Upanishads, and no further,

And, as I have said, all the sects of India now hold these Vyasa Sutras to be the great authority, and every new sect in India starts with a fresh commentary on the Vyasa Sutras according to its light. The difference between some of these commentators is sometimes very great, sometimes the text-torturing is quite disgusting. The Vyasa Sutras have got the place of authority in India now, and no one can expect to found a sect in India until he can write a fresh commentry on the Vyasa Sutras.

Next in authority is the celebrated Gîtâ. The great glory of Sankarâcharya was his preaching of the Gîtâ. It is one of the greatest works that this great man did among the many noble works of his noble life—the preaching of the Gîtâ, and writing the most beautiful commentary on it. And he has been followed by every founder of an orthodox sect in India, each of whom has written a commentary on the Gîtâ. These Upanishads are many in number, said to be one hundred and eight, some declare them to be still larger in number. Some of them are evidently of a much later date, one, for instance, called the Allopanishad, in which Allah is praised, and Mahomet is called the Rajasulla. I have been told that this was written during the reign of Akbar, to bring the Hindus and Mahomedans together, and sometimes they got hold of some word, as Allah, or Illa and so forth, in the Samhitas, and made an Upanishad on it. So in this Allopanishad Mahomet is the Rajasulla whatever that may mean. There are other sectarian Upanishads of the same species, which you find to be entirely modern, and it has been so easy, seeing that this language of the Samhita portion of the Vedas is so archaic that there is no grammar to it. Years ago I had an idea of studying the grammar of the Vedas, and I began with all earnestness to study Pānini and the Mahābhāshya, but to my surprise I found that the best part of the Vedic grammar consists only of exceptions to the rule. A rule is made, and after that comes a statement in the Vedas, "This rule will be an exception." So you see what an amount of liberty there is for anybody to write anything, the only safeguard being the dictionary of Yaska. Still, in this you will find, for the most part, but a large number of synonyms. Given all that, how easy it is to write any number of Upanishads you please. Just a little knowledge of Sanskrit, enough to make words look like the old archaic words, and you have no fear of grammar. Then you bring in Rajasulla, or any other Sullā you like. In that way many Upanishads have been manufactured, and, I am told, they are being manufactured even now. In some parts of India, I am perfectly certain, they are trying to manufacture such Upanishads even now, among the different sects. But among the Upanishads are those, which, on the face of them, bear the evidence of genuineness, and these have been taken up by the great commentators and commented upon, especially those which have been taken up by Sankara, followed by Ramanuja, and all the rest.

There are one or two more ideas with regard to the Upanishads which I want to bring to your notice, for these are an ocean of knowledge, and to talk about the Upanishads, even by an incompetent person like myself, takes years, and not one lecture only. I want, therefore, to bring to your notice one or two points in the study of the Upanishads. In the first place, they are the most marvellous poems in the world. If you read the Samhita portion of the Vedas, you now and then find passages of most marvellous beauty. For instance, the famous Sloka which describes chaos—Tama ásít tamasā gúḍham agre &c., “when darkness was hidden in darkness,” so on it goes. One reads and feels the wonderful sublimity of the poetry. Do you mark this, that outside of India, and inside India also, there have been attempts at painting the sublime. But outside it has always been the infinite in the muscles, the external world, the infinite of matter, or of space. When your Milton or Dante, or any other great European poet, either ancient or modern, wants to paint a picture of the infinite, he tries to soar outside, to make you feel the infinite through the muscles. That attempt has been made here also. You find it in the Samhitas, the infinite of extension, most marvellously painted and placed before the readers, such as has been nowhere else. Mark that one sentence Tama ásít tamasā gúḍham, and now mark the description of darkness by three poets. Take your own Kalidasa “Darkness which can be penetrated with the point of a needle;” Milton—“no light but rather darkness visible,” but come here—Darkness was covering darkness,” “Darkness was hidden in darkness." We who live in the tropics can understand it, the sudden outburst of the monsoon, when, in a moment, the horizon becomes darkened, and clouds become covered with more and more rolling black clouds. So on the poem goes, but yet, in the Samhita portion, all these attempts are external. Like everywhere else, the attempts at finding the solution of great problems of life have been through the external world. Just as the Greek mind, or the modern European mind wants to find the solution of life and of all the sacred problems of Being by searching into the external world, so our forefathers did, and just as the Europeans failed they failed also. But the Westerns never made a move more, they remained there, they failed in the search for the solution of the great problems of life and death in the external world and there they remained, stranded; our forefathers also found it impossible, but were bolder to declare the utter helplessness of the senses to find the solution. Nowhere else was the answer better put than in the same Upanishad Yato vâcho nivartante aprâpya manasâ-saha na tatra chakshurgachchhati na vaggachchhati, "From whence the word comes back reflected by the mind" so on; there are various sentences which declared the utter helplessness of the senses; but they did not stop there, they fell back upon the internal nature of man, they went to get the answer from their own, soul, they became introspective, they gave up external nature as a failure, as nothing could be done there, as no hope, no answer, could be found, they discovered that dull dead matter would not give them truth, and they fell back upon the shining soul of man, and there the answer was found.

Atmânam va vijâniyât, anyâm vâcham vimunchatha "Know this Atman" they declared; "give up all other vain words and hear no other." In the Atman they found the solution—the greatest of all *ātman*s, the God, the Lord of this Universe, His relation to the atman of man, our duty to Him, and through that our relation to each other. And herein you find the most sublime poetry in this world. No more is the attempt made to paint this Atman in the language of matter. Nay, even for it they have given up all positive language. No more is their attempt to come to the senses to give them the idea of the Infinite, no more is there an external, dull, dead, material, spacious, sensual infinite, but, instead of that, comes something which is as fine as even that very saying, Na tatra sūryo bhāti na chandra-tārakam, nema vidyuto bhāti kutoyamagnih, and what poetry in the world can be more sublime than this! “There the sun cannot illumine, nor the moon, nor the stars, a flash of lightning cannot illumine the place; what to speak of this mortal fire!”

Such poetry you find nowhere else. Take that most marvellous Upanishad, the Katha. What a wonderful finish, what a most marvellous art, displayed in that poem! How wonderfully it opens, with that little child to whom Sradha came, who wanted to see Yama, and how that most marvellous of all teachers, Death himself, teaches him the great lessons of life and death! And what was his quest? To know the secret of death.

The second point that I want you to remember is the perfectly impersonal character of the Upanishads. Although we find many names, and many speakers, and many teachers, in the Upanishads, not one of them stands as an authority of the Upanishads, not one verse is based upon the life of any one of the them. These are simply figures like shadows moving in the background, unfelt, unseen, unrealised, but the real force is in the marvellous, the brilliant, the effulgent texts of the Upanishads, perfectly impersonal. If twenty Yājñavalkyas came, and lived, and died, it does not matter; the texts are there. And yet it is against no personality; it is broad and expansive enough to embrace all the personalities that the world has yet produced, and all that are yet to be produced. It has nothing to say against the worship of persons, or Avatārs, or sages. On the other hand, it is always upholding it. At the same time, it is perfectly impersonal. It is a most marvellous idea, like the God it preaches, the impersonal idea of the Upanishads. At the same time for the sage, the thinker, the philosopher, for the rationalist it is as much impersonal as any modern scientist can wish. And these are our scriptures. You must remember that what the Bible is to the Christians, what the Quoran is to the Mahomedans, what the Tripitaka is to the Buddhists, what the Zend Avesta is to the Parsis, so these Upanishads, are to us. These and nothing but these, are our scriptures. The Purānas, the Tantras, and all the other books, even the Vyasa Sutras, are of secondary, tertiary authority, but primary are the Vedas. Manu, and the Purānas, and all the other books are to be taken so far as they agree with the authority of the Upanishads, and when they disagree they are to be rejected without mercy. This we ought to remember always, but unfortunately for India at the present time we have forgotten it. A petty village custom seems now the real authority for the teaching of the Upanishads. A petty idea current in a wayside village in Bengal seems to have the authority of the Vedas, and even something better. And that word "orthodox," how wonderful its influence! To the villager, following every little bit of the Karma Kānda is the very height of orthodoxy, and one who does not do it—"go away, no more a Hindu." So there are, most unfortunately, in my motherland persons who will take up one of these Tantras, and say that the practice of this Tantra is to be obeyed ; he who does not do so is no more orthodox in his views. Therefore it is better for us to remember that in the Upanishads is the primary authority, even the Grihya and Srauta Sūtras are subordinate to the authority of the Vedas. They are the words of the Rishis, our forefathers, and you have to believe them if you want to become a Hindu. You may even believe the most peculiar ideas about the God-head, but if you deny the authority of the Vedas, you are a Nāstika. Therein is the difference of the scriptures of the Christians or the Buddhists, and so on ; they are all Puranas, and not scriptures, because they describe the history of the deluge, and the history of kings and reigning families, and record the lives of great men, and so on. This is the work of the Purānas, and, so far as they agree with the Vedas, very good. So far as the Bible and so on agree with the Vedas they are perfectly good but when they do not agree they are no more to be accepted. So with the Quoran ; there are many moral teachings in these, and so far as they agree with the Vedas they have the authority of the Puranas, but no more. The idea is that the Vedas were never written, the idea is they never came into existence. I was told once by a Christian missionary that their scriptures have a historical character and therefore are true. To which I replied " mine have no historical character, and therefore they are true ; yours being historical they were evidently made by some man the other day. Yours are man-made and mine not ; their non-historicality is in their favor." These are the relations of the Vedas with the other books at the present day.

We now come to the teachings of the Upanishads. Various texts are there. One is perfectly dualistic. What do I mean by dualistic ? There are certain doctrines which are agreed to by all the different sects of India. First there is the doctrine of Samsāra, or re-incarnation of the soul. Secondly, they all agree in their psychology; first there is the body, behind that, what they call the Sūkshma Sarira, the mind, and behind that, even, is the jīva. That is the great difference between Western and Indian Psychology, that in the Western Psychology the mind is the soul; here it is not. The Antahkarana, the internal instrument, as the mind is called is only an instrument in the hands of that jīva, through which the jīva, works on the body, or on the external world. Here they all agree, and they all also agree that this jīva, or Atman, Atman, jīvātman as it is called by various sects, is eternal, without beginning; and that it is going from birth to birth, until it gets a final release. They all agree in this, and they also all agree in one most vital point, which alone marks characteristically, most prominently, most vitally, the difference between the Indian and the western mind, and it is this, that every thing is in the soul. There is no inspiration, but properly speaking expiration. All powers and all purity and all greatness—every thing is in the soul. The Yogi would tell you that the Siddhis—Anima, Laghima, and so on—that he wants to attain to, are not to be attained, in the proper sense of the word but are already there in the soul; the work is to make them manifest. Patanjali, for instance, would tell you that even in the lowest worm that crawls under your feet are all the eightfold Yogi's powers already existing. The difference has been made by the body. As soon as he gets a better body the powers will become manifest, but they are there. Nimittam aprayojakam prakritinām varana bhedastu, tatah kshetrikavat. He gives a celebrated example of the cultivator bringing water into his field from a huge tank somewhere. The tank is already filled and the water would flood his land in a moment, only there is a wall between the tank and his field. As soon as the barrier is broken, in rushes the water out of its own power and force. This mass of power and purity and perfection is in the soul already. The only difference is this āvarana—this veil—that has been cast over it. Once the veil is removed the soul attains to purity, and its powers become manifest. This, you ought to remember, as the great difference between Eastern and Western thought, when you find people teaching such awful doctrines as that we are all born sinners, and because we do not believe in such awful doctrines we are all born wicked, and never stopping to think that if we are by our very nature wicked, we can never be good—how can nature change? If it changes, it contradicts itself; it is not nature. We ought to remember this. Here the Dualist, and the Advaitist, and all others in India agree.

The next point, which, as it at present stands, all the sects in India believe in, is God. Of course their ideas of God will be different. The Dualists believe in a personal God, and a personal only. I want you to understand this word personal, a little more. This word personal does not mean that God has a body, sits on a throne somewhere, and rules this world, but personal means Saguna, with qualities. There are many descriptions of the personal God. This personal God as the Ruler, the Creator, the Preserver, and the Destroyer, of this universe, is believed in by all the sects. The Advaitists believe something more. They believe in a still higher phase of this personal God, which is personal-impersonal. No adjective can illustrate where there is no qualification, and the Advaitist would not give him any qualities except the three—Satchitānanda, Existence, Knowledge and Bliss Absolute. This is what,

Sankara did. But in the Upanishads themselves you find they penetrate even further, and say nothing can be said except neti, neti "not this, not this." Here all the different sects of India agree. But taking the dualistic side I have said I will take Râmānuja as the typical dualist of India, the great modern representative of the dualistic systems; it is a pity that our people in Bengal know so very little about the great religious leaders in India, who have been born in other countries, and for that matter during the whole of the Mahomedon period, with the exception of our Chaitanya, all the great religious leaders were born in Southern India, and it is the intellect of Southern India that is really governing India now; for even Chaitanya belonged to one of these sects, a sect of the Mādhyas—according to Râmānuja these three entities are eternal—God, and soul, and Nature. The souls are eternal, and they will remain eternally existing, individualised through eternity, and will retain their individuality all through. Your soul will be different from my soul through all eternity, says Râmānuja and so will this nature, which is an existing fact, as much existing as the existence of soul, or the existence of God—this will remain always. And God is interpenetrating, the essence of the soul. He is the antaryāmin; in this sense Râmānuja sometimes thinks that God is one with the soul, the essence of the soul, and these souls, at the time of Pralaya, when the whole of nature becomes what he calls Sankocha contracted, become contracted also minute, and remain so for a time. And at the beginning of the next cycle they all come out, according to their past Karma, and undergo the effect of that Karma. Every action that makes the inborn, the natural purity and perfection of the soul go inside, get contracted, is a bad action, and every action that makes it come out and expand itself is a good action, says Rāmānuja. Whatever helps make the Vikāsa of the soul is good, whatever make it Sankocha is bad. And thus the soul is going on, expanding or contracting in its actions, till, through the grace of God, comes Salvation. And that grace comes to all souls, says Rāmānuja, that are pure and struggle for that grace. There is a celebrated verse in the Srutis āhāra suddhau sattva-suddhih sattva-suddhau dhruvā smritih i. e., “when the food is pure than the Sattva becomes pure ; when the Sattva is pure than the smriti,” the memory of the Lord, or the memory of our own perfection—if you are an Advaitist—“becomes truer, steadier, and absolute.” Here is a great discussion. First of all what is this Sattva? We know that according to the Sāṅkhya—and it has been admitted by all our sects of philosophy—the body is composed of three sorts of materials—not qualities mind ; it is the general idea that Sattva, Rajas and Tamas are qualities. Not at all, not qualities but the materials of this universe, and with āhāra suddhi when the food is pure, the Sattva material becomes pure. The one theme of the Vedānta is to get this Sattva. As I have told you, the soul is already pure and perfect, and it is, according to the Vedānta, covered up by Rajas and Tamas particles. The Sattva particles are the most luminous, and the effulgence of the soul penetrates through them as easily as light through glass. So if the Rajas and Tamas particles go, and leave the sattva particles, in this state the power and purity of the soul will appear, and leave the soul more manifest. Therefore it is necessary to have this Sattva. And the text says “when the āhāra becomes pure.” Rāmānuja takes this word to mean food, and he has made it one of the turning points of his philosophy. Not only so, it has affected the whole of India, and all the different sects. Therefore, it is necessary for us to understand what it means, for that, according to Rāmānuja, is one of the principal factors in our life, āhāra suddhi. What makes food impure, asks Rāmānuja? Three sorts of defects makes food impure—first, jāti, the very nature of the class, to which the food belongs, as onions, garlic, and so on. The next is āsraya, the person from whom the food comes—a wicked person is āsraya, and so on; food coming from him will make you impure. I myself have seen many great sages in India following strictly that advice all their lives. Of course they had the power to know who brought food, and who has even touched the food, and I have seen it in my own life, not once, but hundreds of times—the person from whom it comes. Nimitta-dosha, impurity in food is another. We had better attend to that a little more now. It has become too prevalent in India to take food with dirt and dust and bits of hair in it. If food is taken from which these three defects have been removed, that makes sattva-suddhi, purifies the Sattva. Religion seems to be a very easy task then. Everyone can do that, if it is by eating pure food only. There is none so weak or incompetent in this world, that I know, who cannot save himself from these defects. Then comes Sankarāchārya, who says this word āhāra means thought collected in the mind; when that becomes pure, the sattva becomes pure, and not before that. You may eat what you like. If food alone would purify the Sattva than feed the monkey with milk and rice all its life; would it become a great Yogi? The cows and the deer would become great Yogis first. As has been said, if it is by bathing much, the fishes will get to heaven first. If by eating vegetables a man gets to heaven, the cows and the deer will get to heaven first. But what is the solution? Both are necessary. Of course that idea that Sankarāchārya gives us of the text is the primary idea. But pure food, no doubt, helps pure thought; it has an intimate connection ; both ought to be there. But the defect is that in modern India we have forgotten the advice of Sankarāchārya and taken only the “pure food” meaning. That is why people get mad with me when I say religion has got into the kitchen, and if you had been in Madras with me now you would have agreed with me. You Bengalees are better than that. In Madras they throw away food if any body looks at it. And with all this, I do not see that the people are any the better there. If only eating this and that sort of food, and saving it from the looks of this person and that person would give them perfection you would expect them all to be perfect men, which they are not, apart from the few friends we have now here—of course they are perfect.

Thus, although these are to be combined, and linked together to make a perfect whole, do not put the cart before the horse. There is a cry now-a-days about this and that food, and about Varnāsrāma and the Bengalees are the most vociferous in these cries. I would ask every one of you what do you know about this Varnāsrāma? Where are the four castes to-day in this country? Answer me ; I do not see the four castes. Just as our Bengalee proverb says, as headache without a head, you want to make this Varnāsrāma here. There are not four castes here. I see only the Brahmin and the Sūdra. If there are the Kshatriyas and the Vaisyas where are they, and why do not you Brahmins order them to take the Yagnopavīta and study the Vedas, as every Hindu is ordered?—and if the Vaisyas and the Kshatriyas do not exist, and only the Brahmins and the Sūdras exist, the Sāstras say that the Brahmin must not live in a country, where there are only Sūdras, so depart bag and baggage. Do you know what the Sāstras say about people who have been eating mlechcha food, and living under a Government of the mlechchas, as you have for the last thousand years? Do you know the penance for that? The penance would be burning one's self with his own hands. Do you want to pass as teachers and walk like hypocrites? If you believe in your Sāstras burn yourselves first like the one great Brahmin did, who went with Alexander the Great, and burnt himself because he thought he had eaten the food of a mlechcha. Do like that and you will see that the whole nation will be at your feet. You do not believe in your own Sāstras and want to make others believe. If you think you are not able to do that in this age, admit your weakness and excuse the weakness of others, take the other castes up by the hand give them a helping hand, let them study the Vedas, and become just as good Aryans as any other Aryans in the world, and be you likewise Aryans, you Brahmins of Bengal.

Give up this filthy Vāmāchāra that is killing your country. You have not seen the other parts of India. When I enter my own country with all its boast of culture, it is a most disgraceful, hellish place I find, when I see how much the Vāmāchāra has entered our society. These Vāmāchāra sects are honeycombing our society in Bengal and it is those who carry on the most horrible debauchery at night, who in the day time come out and preach most loudly about āchāra, and in this way they are backed by the most dreadful books. They are ordered by the books to do these things. You know it who are of Bengal. The Bengalee Sāstras are the Vāmāchāra Tantras. They are published by the cart-load, and poison the minds of your children instead of teaching them your Srutis. Do you not feel, fathers of Calcutta, a shame that such horrible stuff as these Vāmāchāra Tantras, with translations, too, should be put into the hands of your children, boys and girls, and their minds poisoned, and that they should be brought up with the idea that these are the Sāstras of the Hindus? If you do, take them away from your children, and let them read the true Sāstras, the Vedas, the Gitā, the Upanishads.

According to the dualistic sects of India, the individual souls remain as individuals throughout, and God is the Creator of the universe out of pre-existing material, only as the efficient cause. According to the Advaitists, on the other hand, God is both the material and the efficient cause of the universe. He is not only the Creator of the universe, but He creates it out of Himself. That is the Advaitist position. There are crude dualistic sects who believe that this world has been created by God out of Himself, and at the same time God is eternally separate from the universe, and at the same time everything is eternally subordinate to this Ruler of the Universe. There are sects too who also believe that out of Himself God has evolved this universe, and individuals in the long run attain to Nirvāna, give up the finite and become the infinite. But these sects have disappeared. The one sect of Advaitists that you see in modern India is composed of the followers of Sankara. According to Sankara, God is both the material and the efficient cause, through Māyā, but not in reality. God has not become this universe, but the universe is not, and God is. This is one of the highest points to understand of Advaita Vedānta, this idea of Māyā. I am afraid I have no time to discuss this one most difficult point in our philosophy. Those of you who are acquainted with Western philosophy will find something very similar in Kant. But I must warn you, those of you, who have studied Professor Max Muller's writings on Kant, that there is one idea most misleading. It was Sankara who first found out the idea of the identity of time, space and causation with Māyā, and I had the good fortune to find one or two passages in Sankara's commentaries and send them to my friend the Professor. So even that idea was here in India. Now this is a peculiar theory—this Māyā theory of the Advaita Vedāntists. The Brahman is all that exists, but differentiation has been caused by this Māyā. Unity, the one Brahman is the ultimate, the goal, and herein is an eternal dissension again between Indian and Western thought. India has thrown this challenge to the world for thousands of years, and the challenge has been taken up by different nations, and the result is that they all succumbed and you live. This is the challenge, that this world is a delusion, that it is all Māyā, that whether you eat out of the ground with your fingers, or dine out of golden plates, whether you live in palaces, are one of the mightiest of monarchs, or are the poorest of beggars, death is the one result; it is all the same, all Māyā. That is the old Indian theme, and again and again nations are springing up trying to unsay it, to disprove it, becoming great, enjoyment their watchword, power in their hands, and they use that power to the utmost, enjoy to the utmost, and the next moment they die. We stand for ever because we see that everything is Māyā. The children of Māyā live for ever, but children of enjoyment die.

Here is again another great difference. Just as you find in German Philosophy the attempts of Hegel and Schopenhæur you will find the very same ideas coming in ancient India. Fortunately for us Hegelianism was nipped in the bud, and not allowed to sprout out and cast its baneful shoot over this mother-land of ours. Hegel's one idea is that the one, the absolute, is only chaos, and that the individualised form is the greater. The world is greater than the non-world, Samsâra is greater than salvation. That is the one idea, and the more you plunge into this Samsâra, the more your soul is covered with the workings of life, the better you are. They say do you not see how we build houses, cleanse the streets, enjoy the senses. Aye, behind that they may hide rancour, misery, horror—behind every bit of that enjoyment. On the other hand, our philosophers have from the very first declared that every manifestation, what you call evolution, is vain, a vain attempt of the unmanifested to manifest itself. Aye, you almighty cause of this universe, trying to reflect yourself into little mud puddles, and after making the attempt for a little time you find out it was vain, and beat the retreat to the place from whence you came. This is Vairâgya, or renunciation, and the very beginning of religion. How can religion or morality begin without renunciation, itself? The Alpha and Omega is renunciation, “give up,” says the Vedas, “give up.” That is the one way, give up. Na prajayâ dhanena nachejyayâ tyâ'genaikena amritâtvamânasuh. “Neither through wealth, nor through progeny, but by giving up alone that immortality is to be reached.” That is the dictate of the Indian books. Of course, there have been great givers up of the world even sitting on the thrones, but even Janaka himself had to renounce; who was a greater renouncer than he? But in modern times we all want to be called Janakas. They are all Janakas, all over India but unfortunately I find them only Janakas of children, unclad, ill-fed, miserable children. That is all they are of Janaka, not with shining, God-like thoughts as the old Janaka was. These are our modern Janakas. A little less of this Janakism now, and come straight to the mark! If you can give up, you will have religion. If you cannot you may read all the books that are in the world, from East to West, swallow all the libraries, and become the greatest of Pandits, but if you have that Karma Kānda you are nothing ; there is no spirituality. Through renunciation alone this immortality is to be reached. It is the power, the great power, that cares not even for the universe. Brahmāndam goshpadāyate i. e., "how the whole universe becomes a hollow made by a cow's foot." Renunciation, that is the flag, the banner of India, floating over the world, the one undying thought which India sends again and again as a warning to dying races, as a warning to all tyranny, as a warning to wickedness in the world. Aye, Hindus, let not your hold of that banner go. Hold it aloft. Even if you are weak, and cannot renounce, do not lower the ideal. Say I am weak and cannot renounce the world, but do not try to be hypocrites, torturing texts, and making specious arguments and trying to throw dust in the eyes of people who ought to have known better. Do not do that, but declare you are weak. For the idea is great that of renunciation. What matters if millions fail in the attempt if one, if two, if ten soldiers return victorious ! Blessed be the millions dead ! Their blood has bought the victory. This renunciation is the one ideal throughout the different Vedic sects except one, and that is the Vallabhāchārya sect in Bombay Presidency, and most of you are aware what comes where renunciation does not exist. We want orthodoxy, even the hideously orthodox, even those who smother themselves with ashes, even those who stand with their hands uplifted. Aye, we want them, unnatural though they be, as a warning to the race, of the idea of giving up rather than the effeminate luxuries that are creeping into India, trying to eat into our very vitals, trying to make the whole race a race of hypocrites. We want to have it. Renunciation has conquered India in days of yore, it has still to conquer India. Still it stands greatest and highest of Indian ideals,—renunciation. The land of Buddha, the land of Ràmānuja, of Rámakrishna Paramahansa, the land of renunciation, the land where, from the days of yore was preached against Karma Kāndu, and even to-day there are hundreds who have given up everything, passed everything away and become Jīvan-muktas—Aye, will that land give up its ideals? Certainly not. There may be people whose brains have become turned with Western luxurious ideals. There may be thousands, and hundreds of thousands, who have drunk deep of this curse of the West, enjoyment, the curse of the world, the senses, yet for all that there will be other thousands in this mother-land of mine to whom religion will be a reality, and who are ready to give up without counting the cost, if need be.

Another ideal very common in all our sects, I want to place before you; it is also a vast subject. This idea is unique in India alone, that is to say that religion is to be realized. Nāyamātma pravachanena labhyo na medhayā bahunā srutena. “This Atman is not to be reached by too much talking, nor is it to be reached by the power of intellect.” Nay, ours is the only scripture in the world that declares not even by the study of the scriptures the Atman is to be realised—not talks, not lecturing, none of that, but it is to be realised. It comes from the teacher unto the disciple. When this insight comes to the disciple every thing is cleared up and realisation comes.

One more idea. There is a peculiar custom in Bengal which they call kulaguru. My father has been your Guru, I will be your Guru. My father has been the Guru of your father I will be yours. What is a Guru? Let us go back to the Srutis “He who knows the secret of the Vedas” not book-worms, not Grammarians, not pandits in general, but he who knows the meaning. Yatha kharaschandana bhâravâhi bhârasya vetta na tu chandanasya "An ass laden with a mass of sandal wood knows only the weight of the wood, but not its precious qualities;" so are these pandits; we do not want these, not such; What can they teach if they have no realisation? When I was a boy here in this city of Calcutta, I used to go from place to place in search of religion, and everywhere I asked after hearing very big lectures, "have you seen God?" The man was taken back at the idea of seeing God, and the only man who told me "I have" was Râmakrishna Paramahansa, and not only so but he said "I will put you in the way of seeing Him too." Not a man who can twist and torture texts as, Vâgvaikhari sabdajharisâstra vyâkhyâna kausalam vaiduslyam vidushâm tadva bhuktaye natu muktaye "Different ways of throwing out words, different ways of explaining texts of the scriptures, these are for the enjoyment of the learned, not for freedom." Srotriya, he who knows the secret of the Srutis, Avrijina, the sinless, and Akâmahata, he who does not want to make money by teaching you—he is the Sânta, the Sâdhu, who comes as the spring, which brings the leaves and fruits to various plants, but does not ask anything from the plant, for its very nature is to do good. It does good and there it is. Such is the Guru. Tirnâssvayam bhîma bhavârnavam hi, anyânahetînapi târayantah. Who has himself crossed this ocean of life, and without any idea of gain to himself helps others to cross the ocean also. "This is the Guru, and mark that none else can be a Guru, for Avidyâyamantare vartamânâh svayam dhîrâh panditam manyamânâh janghanyamânâh pariyanti mûdhâh andhenaiiva ntyamânâh yathândhâh "themselves steeped in darkness, but in the pride of their hearts think they know everything; do not stop even there, want to help others, and, blind leading the blind, both fall into the ditch." Thus, say your Vedas. Compare that and your present custom. You are Vedântists, you are very orthodox, are you not? You are great Hindus, and very orthodox. Aye what I want to do is to make you more orthodox. The more orthodox you are the more sensible, and the more you think of modern orthodoxy the more foolish you are. Go back to your old orthodoxy, for in those days every sound that came from these books, every pulsation, was out of a strong, steady, and sincere heart; every note was true. After that came degradation, in art, in science, in religion, in everything, national degradation. We have no time to discuss the causes but all the books written about that period breathe of the pestilence, the national decay, instead of vigour, only wails and cries. Go back, go back to the old days, when there was strength and vitality. Be strong once more, drink deep out of this fountain of yore and that is the only condition of life in India.

According to the Advaitist—I am forgetting my Dualist and Advaitist, it is such a vast subject, and I have so much to tell you about many things that I forget everything else—according to the Advaitist, therefore, this individuality which we have to-day is a delusion. This has been a hard nut to crack all over the world. Forthwith you tell a man he is not an individual, he is so much afraid that his individuality, whatever that may be, will be lost. But the Advaitist says there never has been an individuality, you have been changing every moment of your life. You have been a child and thought in one way, you are a man and think another way, you will be an old man and think another way. Everybody is changing. If so, where is your individuality? Certainly not in the body, or in the mind or in thought. And beyond that is your Atman, and, says the Advaitist, this Atman is the Brahman itself. There cannot be two Infinities. There is only one individual and it is Infinite. In plain words, we are rational beings and we want to reason. And what is reason? More or less of classification, until you cannot go on any further. And the finite can only find its ultimate rest when it is classified into the Infinite. Go on taking up a finite and finding its reasons, and so on, but you find rest nowhere until you reach the ultimate, or Infinite, and that Infinite, says the Advaitist, is what alone exists. Everything else is Māyā, everything else does not exist, whatever is of existence in any material thing is this Brahman; we are this Brahman, and the shape and everything else is Māyā. Take off the form and shape, and you and I are all one. But we have to guard against the word, 'I.' Generally people say, if I am the Brahman why cannot I do this and that, but it is using the word in a different sense. You think you are a body, or a man, and as soon as you do this you are bound; no more you are Brahman the Self, who wants nothing, whose light is inside. All his pleasures and bliss are inside, perfectly satisfied with himself, wants nothing, expects nothing, perfectly fearless, perfectly free. That is Brahman. In that we are all one.

Now this seems, therefore, to be the great point of difference between the Dualist and the Advaitist. You find even great commentators like Sankarāchārya, making meanings of texts, which, to my mind, sometimes do not seem to be justified. Sometimes you find Rāmānuja dealing with texts in a way that is not very clear. This idea has been even among our Pandits—one of these sects can alone be true and the rest false, although they have got the idea even from the Srutis, the most wonderful idea that India has yet to give to the world, Ekam sat viprā bahudhā vadanti

“That which exists is one; the sages call it by various names”. That has been the theme, and the working out of the whole of this life-problem of the nation is the working out of that theme—Ekam sadviprā bahudhā vadanti: Yea, except a very few learned men, I mean except a very few spiritual men, in India, we always forget this. We forget this great idea, and you will find that there are persons among Pandits—I should think 98 per cent—who are of opinion that either the Advaitist will be true, or the Visishtādvaitist will be true, or the Dvaitist will be true, and if you go to Benares, and sit for five minutes in one of those ghats you will have demonstration of what I say. You will see a regular bull-fight going on, about these various sects and things. Thus it remains, and then came one whose life was the explanation, whose life was the working out of the harmony that is the background of all the different sects of India, I mean Rāmakrishna Paramahansa. It is his life that explains that both of these are necessary, that they are like the geocentric and the heliocentric in astronomy. When a child is taught astronomy he is taught the geocentric first, and works out similar ideas of astronomy to the heliocentric. But when he comes to finer systems of astronomy, the heliocentric will be necessary, and he will understand it better. Dualism is the natural idea of the senses ; as long as we are bound by the senses we are bound to see a God who is only Personal, and nothing but Personal, we are bound to see the world as it is. Says Rāmānuja, “so long as you think you are a body, and you think you are a mind and you think you are a Jīva every act of perception will give you the three, God and nature and something as causing both.” But yet, at the same time, even the idea of the body disappears where the mind itself becomes finer and finer till it has almost all disappeared, when all the different things that bind us down to this body-life, make us fear, make us weak, have disappeared. What is the Upanishad saying? Ihaiva tairjitassvargah yeshām sāmye sthitam manah. Nirdosham hi samam Brahma tasmāt Brahmani te sthitah &c. Then and then alone one finds out the truth of that grand old saying—"Even in this life they have conquered heaven, whose minds are fixed on this sameness of everything, for God is pure, and the same to all, and therefore, such are said to be living God. Thus seeing the same Lord the same everywhere the sage, does not hurt the self by the self, and thus goes to the highest goal."

ALMORA.

After spending two months at Darjeeling, at the request of the citizens of Almora on the Himalayas the Swami went to that place. At Lodea close to Almora a large crowd greeted him. Mounted on a horse dressed in handsome trappings he entered the City amidst constant cheering and general rejoicing of the people, and was received in a gorgeously decorated pandal improvised for the occasion by covering with cloth a section of the bazaar street. Pandit Jwala Dutt Joshi read a Hindi address on behalf of the Reception Committee of which the following is a translation :—

“ Great-Souled one. Since the time we heard that, after gaining spiritual conquest in the West, you had started from England for your fatherland, India, we were naturally desirous of having the pleasure of seeing you. By the grace of the Almighty, that auspicious moment has at last come. The saying of the great poet and the prince of Bhaktas, Tulsidas—“ A person who intensely loves another is sure to find him,” has been fully realized to-day. We have assembled here to welcome you with sincere devotion. You have highly obliged us by your kindly taking so much trouble in paying a visit to this town again. We can hardly thank you enough for your kindness. Blessed are you ! Blessed is the revered Gurudeva who initiated you into Yoga Blessed is the land of Bhárata where, even in this fearful Kaliyuga, there exist leaders of Aryan families like yourself. Even at an early period of life, you have by your simplicity, sincerity, character, philanthropy, severe discipline, conduct, and the preaching of knowledge acquired that immaculate fame throughout the world of which we feel so much proud.

In truth you have accomplished that difficult task which no one ever undertook in this country since the days of Sri Sankarâchârya. Which of us ever dreamt that a descendant of the old Indian Aryans by dint of tapas, would prove to the learned people of England and America the superiority of the ancient Indian Religion over other creeds. In the World's Parliament of Religions held in Chicago, before the representatives of different religions assembled there, you so ably advocated the superiority of the ancient religion of India, that their eyes got opened. In that great assembly, learned speakers defended their respective religions in their own way, but you surpassed them all. You completely established that no religion can compete with the religion of the Vedas. Not only this, but by preaching the ancient wisdom at various places in the continents aforesaid, you have attracted many learned men towards the ancient Aryan Religion and Philosophy. In England, too, you have planted the banner of the ancient religion which it is impossible now to remove.

Up to this time the modern civilized nations of Europe and America were entirely ignorant of the genuine nature of our religion, but you have with your spiritual teaching opened their eyes, by which they have come to know that the ancient religion, which owing to their ignorance they used to brand "as a religion of subtleties of conceited people or a mass of discourses meant for fools," is a mine of gems. Certainly "It is better to have a virtuous and accomplished son than to have hundreds of foolish ones." It is the moon that singly with its light dispels all darkness and not all the stars put together." It is only the life of good and virtuous sons like yourself that is really useful to the world. Mother India is consoled in her decayed state by the presence of pious sons like you. Many have crossed the seas and run to and fro, but it was only through the reward of your past good Karma that you have proved the greatness of our religion beyond the seas. You have made it the sole aim of your life by word, thought and deed, to impart spiritual instruction to humanity. You are always ready to give religious instruction.

“We have heard with great pleasure that you intend establishing a Math (Monastery) here and we sincerely pray that your efforts in this direction may be crowned with success. The great Sankaràcharya also after his spiritual conquest, established a Math in the sacred Badarikàsrama in the Himalayas for the protection of the ancient religion. Similarly, if your desire is also fulfilled, India will be greatly benefitted. By the establishment of the Math, we Kamaonees will derive special spiritual advantages and we will not see the ancient religion gradually disappearing from our midst.

From time immemorial, this part of the country has been the land of asceticism. The greatest of the Indian sages have passed their time in piety and asceticism in this land, all of which have become a thing of the past. We earnestly hope that by the establishment of the Math you will kindly make us realize it again. It was this sacred land which enjoyed the celebrity all over India of having true religion, Karma, discipline, and fair dealing, all of which seem to have been decaying by the efflux of time. And we hope that by your noble exertions this land will revert to its ancient religious state.

We cannot adequately express the joy we have felt at your arrival here. May you live long, enjoying perfect health and leading a philanthropic life. May your spiritual powers be ever on the increase so that through your endeavours the unhappy state of India may soon disappear.”

Pandit Hari Ram Pande followed with a second address from Lala Badri Shah who was the Swami's host during the whole of his stay at Almora ; and a Pandit read an equally appreciative Sanskrit address.

The Swami made a brief reply only. He said :—

This is the land of dreams of our fore-fathers, in which was born Pārṣvati, the mother of India. This is the holy land, where every ardent soul in India wants to come at the end of its life and to close the last chapter of its mortal career here. There on the tops of the mountains of this blessed land, in the depths of its caves, on the banks of its rushing torrents, have been thought out the most wonderful thoughts, a little bit of which has drawn so much admiration even from foreigners, and which have been pronounced by the most competent of judges to be incomparable. This is the land which, since my very childhood, I have been dreaming of, in which to pass my life, and as all of you are aware, I have attempted again and again to live here forever, and, although the time was not ripe, and I had work to do and was whirled outside of this holy place, yet it is the hope of my life to end my days somewhere in this father of mountains, where Rishis lived, where philosophy was born. Perhaps, my friends, I shall not be able to do it, in the same way that it was my plan before—that silence, that unknownness, would also be given to me, yet I sincerely pray and hope, and almost believe, my last days will be here of all places on earth. Inhabitants of this holy land, accept my gratitude for the kind praise that has fallen from you for my little work in the West. But, at the same time, my mind does not want to speak of these works, either in the East or in the West. As peak after peak of this father of mountains began to appear before my sight, all those propensities to work, that ferment that had been going on in my brain for years, seemed to quiet down, and instead of talking about what had been done, and what was going to be done, the mind reverted to that one eternal theme which the Himalayas always teach us, that one theme which is reverberating in the very atmosphere of the place, the one theme the murmur of whose dreams I hear, the one thing that I hear in the rushing whirlpools of its rivers—renunciation. Sarvam vastu bhayānvitam bhuvī nrinām vāirdgyamevābhayam,—"Everything in this life is fraught with fear. It is renunciation that makes one fearless." Yes, this is the land of renunciation. The time will not permit me, and the circumstances are not proper, to speak to you fully. I shall have to conclude, therefore, by pointing out to you that these Himalayas stand for that renunciation, and the grand lesson we shall ever teach unto humanity will be renunciation. As our fore-fathers used to be attracted towards it in the latter days of their lives, so strong souls from all quarters of this earth, in time to come, will be attracted to this father of mountains, when all this fight between sects, and all those differences in dogmas, will not be remembered any more, and quarrels between your religion and my religion will have vanished altogether, when mankind will understand that there is but one eternal religion, and that is the perception of the Divine within, and the rest is mere froth : such ardent souls will come here knowing that the world is but vanity of vanities knowing that every thing is useless except the worship of the Lord and the Lord alone. Friends, you have been very kind to allude to one idea. I have yet in my brain, to start a centre in the Himalayas and perhaps I have sufficiently explained myself why it should be so, why above all, this is the spot which I want to select as one of the great centres to teach this universal religion. These mountains are associated with the best memories of our race, if these Himalayas are taken away from the history of religious India, there will be very little left behind. Here, therefore, must be one of those centres, not merely of activity, but more of calmness, of meditation, and of peace and I hope some day to realise it. I hope also to meet you at other times, and have better opportunities of talking to you. For the present let me thank you again for all the kindness that has been shown to me, and let me take it as not only kindness shown to me in person, but as representing religion which may never leave our hearts. May we always remain as pure as we are at the present moment, and as enthusiastic for spirituality as we are just now.
